Not so festive Christmas for local decor makers

CHEERFUL, gaily colored Christmas decorations from the Philippines adorn the shop windows at Bloomingdale's in New York and Harrods in London—but at home, the makers of such products are not in festive mood. Balloons, butterflies to grace KC burial

By Margaux C. Ortiz and Nancy C. Carvajal

WHEN Speaker Jose de Venecia Jr. arrived with his wife Gina at the Santuario de San Antonio in Forbes Park, he was carrying the urn that contained the ashes of their daughter Ma. Kristina Casimira or "KC."

According to Gina's sister, Marichu Maceda, the heartbroken couple take the urn with them every night after the prayer vigil.

"He wants the urn with him all the time. He brings it back here (Santuario) for the Mass and the vigil," Maceda said.

KC, the De Venecias' youngest daughter, died early Friday morning in a fire which destroyed their Dasmariñas Village home. She was only 16.

Leslie Norton, De Venecia's daughter from a previous marriage, said the Speaker would bring the urn to his room at the Dusit Hotel "to say goodbye."

"It has been a very rough time for the family," Norton, who arrived from New York last night, said. "They want to be close to their daughter."

Norton remembers "how light and joyous KC was" and "how interested she was in the world ... She was a lovely girl ... I'm heartbroken," she said.

Maceda, an avid supporter of Fernando Poe Jr. and a close friend of Susan Rocas, also ex-

Massive turnout at wake a warning to elite

By Amando Doronila

THE DEATH of Fernando Poe Jr. is being blown up into a grotesque caricature that distorts the impact of his demise on the political life of this country.

Poe's contribution to his vocation as an actor and to the film industry is beyond dispute. His claim to fame went beyond the silver screen when he morphed from an actor into a politician. He had the audacity to storm no less than the commanding heights of Philippine politics—the presidency. When he succumbed to a fatal stroke, he was a failed politician.

If Poe had died without having stood for president, there would be no doubt that tens of thousands of his movie fans and admirers would have deeply mourned his passing.

The multitudes that have filed past his body during the wake of the past few days are grieving that they have lost an alter ego—a person whose manifold movie roles incarnated the aspirations of the disadvantaged Filipino masses for justice and a better life.

The most accurate tribute ever paid to Poe was that which described him as the icon of the unfulfilled aspirations of the Filipino underdog who had identified with him in his film roles battling abusive and corrupt authority and oppressors, and coming to the rescue of the weak.

Poe was the lightning rod of these aspirations that have for many generations been looking

Susan Rocas appeals to supporters of 'Da King'

By Edson Tandoc Jr., Luigie A. del Puerto and Fe Zamora

A SOLEMN funeral fit for a man loved by the people.

This was the appeal aired yesterday by Fernando Poe Jr.'s widow, movie actress Susan Rocas, as she and her family stepped up preparations for what is expected to be a blockbuster of a funeral at the North Cemetery on Wednesday.

"Walang pulitika (No politics)," Rocas said, when asked what her marching orders were to FPJ's supporters. "That's to everyone and everyone agrees."

"We are safeguarding that that does not happen," she added, referring to an opposition senator's warning that the huge throngs expected to attend the funeral may get out of control and adventurers might use the occasion to destabilize the government.

The widow spoke to reporters in a lobby of the Sto. Domingo Church where FPJ's remains lie as stream upon stream of mourners, most of them ordinary people and many carrying cameras to take pictures of the dead movie king, plodded past the gleaming coffin.

In a dark suit with a light blue tie, FPJ lies in a maroon coffin amid white blossoms.

"Our supporters are helping us to make sure that [the funeral] will not be tarnished by politics," Rocas said.

Queried about a statement by opposition leader Sen. Aquilino Pimentel Jr. that political opportunists might use the funeral for political ends, Rocas said: "I do not sense, I do not hear and I do not think that will happen. All come here to pay their respects for my husband. It is enough that they catch even a glimpse of him."

FPJ's younger brother, Conrad, rejected the idea that some people would turn the funeral march into a political forum. FPJ himself would not want to take advantage of other people and he would not want other people to take advantage of him, Conrad said.

"Let us put a stop to this [politics], even for just a while," Conrad said, adding that his brother did not condone violence. "Let us bear him peacefully to his resting place. Let us not wreck the occasion ... Let us keep to ourselves whatever we feel inside that could erupt," he said.

Lanterns prove RP can achieve synergy

By Tonette Orejas

CITY OF SAN FERNANDO—Nine giant lanterns, the modern versions of the Star of Bethlehem, dazzled some 60,000 local and foreign spectators at the amphitheater of SM City Pampanga here on Saturday.

The lanterns—each 5.63 meters in diameter and fitted with 4,000 to 6,000 light bulbs—were the "stars" in this year's Ligligan Parul (Giant Lantern Festival).

Borne on trucks, displayed in a row and accompanied by the images of the villages' patron saints, the lanterns put on a spectacular display under skies illuminated by a half-moon and a handful of stars.

Sen. Manuel Roxas II, the festival's guest, said the lanterns signified the Filipino's ability to rise above hard times, noting the tragedies that had befallen the country this year.

Roxas also likened the lanterns to Filipinos. They come from diverse backgrounds, but when they unite, they can work to push the country forward and into progress. They are like lanterns, where elements—color, shape, material, light source—work together in a synchronized manner.

Cebuano nurse makes it big in Nevada

By Connie E. Fernandez

CEBU CITY—He used to rummage through the neighborhood trash for whatever could be sold to the nearest "timbangan" (junkshop) to augment his school allowance. But he does not have to do that now.

He has come a long way—from an urban poor community here to the glittering world of Las Vegas, Nevada, USA, where he was recently named "Nurse of the Year."

Rhigel Tan, 35, the only child of a retired schoolteacher and retired policeman, did not expect to win. His mind went blank when his name was called during the awarding ceremonies on Nov. 13 at the grand ballroom of the Rlo Ail-Suite Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas.

Although he did not prepare a speech, Tan did not forget the promise he made to himself in case he won. He closed his message to the crowd of 700 that included state officials and medical practitioners with "Thank you ...

maraming salamat ... daghang salamat."

In an e-mail to the Inquirer, Tan said he did this "so people would know where I came from or at least would wonder what I said, and would end up asking."

Tan grew up in Barangay Duljo here, which he described as "a total picture of what poverty is all about." He recalled that although both his parents were working, money was scarce and hardship was on the "everyday menu."

He would do his share to help his parents. In the summer, Tan would sell "bananacue" and boiled eggs in the neighborhood. To earn additional money, he would scavenge the trash for tin cans, empty bottles and wrought iron.

He enjoyed doing these because his mother had once told him that there was nothing shameful about earning an honest living.

Tan said he had found his calling while taking care of pigs, which his mother raised to help pay the bills

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo will stand by her Cabinet and other government appointees who fail to make it past the Commission on Appointments.

"The President will reappoint them once they are bypassed," said Communications Director Silvestre Afafe in an interview yesterday.

Afafe also reiterated the President's continued confidence in her appointees who had been bypassed by the CA, such as Interior Secretary Angelo Reyes and Elections Commissioner Virgilio Garcillano. Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. said Saturday Reyes and Garcillano should quit their posts and let the President name their replacements since being bypassed by the CA was tantamount to having their nominations rejected.

But Afafe said the bypassed appointees continued to have Ms Arroyo's support, particularly Reyes who was recently named to head the revived National Anti-Smuggling Task Force as well.

Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye, who received the CA's nod last week, said the President was satisfied with the performance of her appointees. He said lack of time more than lack of qualifications was the main reason some appointees were bypassed by the CA.

Reds thumb down ceasefire, peace talks with gov't

By TJ Burgenio
and Delfin T. Mallari Jr.,
PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

THE RESUMPTION of formal peace talks between the government and communist rebels is now unlikely after the latter accused the government of seeking their "capitulation" as a precondition.

At the same time, the communist-led National Democratic Front of the Philippines rejected the unilateral ceasefire declared by the government, branding it as "tricky psywar."

Fidel Agcaoili, chair of the NDF committee on human rights, said the group "desired" the resumption of formal peace talks with the government.

"But the prospects for such resumption under the Arroyo regime are dim," Agcaoili said in a statement, citing the government's resolve "to impose as a precondition the capitulation of the NDF under the guise of an indefinite ceasefire," among other things.

This, he said, violated The Hague Joint Declaration.

Tricky psywar

"The NDF considers as tricky psywar the so-called unilateral ceasefire issued by the GRP for the Christmas and New Year holidays and is calling on the people and the revolutionary forces to be vigilant against the treacherous acts of the military, police, paramilitary and private armed gangs of the regime," Agcaoili said.

The government had voiced hopes the unilateral ceasefire it had declared with the New People's Army would lead to a permanent ceasefire.

Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye said the government would welcome a reciprocal action from the rebels, but "it would be more beneficial if both the government and the CPP-NPA can come up with a lasting ceasefire."

President Macapagal-Arroyo declared a ceasefire with the rebels from Dec. 16 to Jan. 5, replicating what has become a tradition during the Christmas season.

Agcaoili, who co-chairs the NDF-government joint monitoring committee, also cited other reasons for the gloomy prospects for the peace talks.

US collaboration

These include the government's collaboration with the US "in using the so-called terrorist listing" to blackmail the NDF and extort capitulation; the huge role played by the US in crafting the administration policy on peace negotiations, and the impending ouster of the Arroyo administration by an outraged people.

He also accused the US and the GRP of threatening to assassinate Europe-based panelists and consultants of the NDF, especially NDF chief political consultant Prof. Jose Maria Sison.

"They are trying to kill the GRP-NDF peace negotiations completely in order to make way for the escalation of US military intervention and for the increased US stranglehold on the Philippine neocolony," he said.

Bello surprised

Silvestre Bello, the government's chief negotiator, was taken aback by reports that the NPA rebels had turned down the government's appeal for a Christmas ceasefire.

"We're surprised. I just talked to Fidel Agcaoili and he said they were studying reciprocating the government's offer," Bello said.

Executive Secretary Eduardo Imbita said the government would not take back its offer of a Christmas ceasefire although the military and police have been ordered to go on full alert.

The communist rebels called off peace talks with the government in August, accusing Malacanang of not doing enough to persuade international governments to remove them from their list of foreign terrorist organizations.

Agcaoili described the terrorist listing as a violation of The Hague Joint Declaration, the Joint Agreement on Safety and Immunity Guarantees and the Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law, which were signed by the NDF and the Philippine government.

Christmas tradition

In an earlier interview, communist spokesperson Gregorio "Kun Roger" Rosal said the communist insurgents were also inclined to declare their own ceasefire as part of the Christmas tradition but only in certain areas.

"But we will only do so after a thorough assessment of the party's higher organ and not because that's what the AFP wanted us to do," Rosal said in an interview.

Rosal was reacting to Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Efren Abu's statement on Thursday that the military would recommend the cancellation of the Yuletide truce declared by President Macapagal-Arroyo if it continues with hostile actions.

Rosal scoffed at the military saying, "the Red-fighters are not obliged to obey government declared ceasefires."

"The NPA will continue to attack anytime if there's an opening because they don't have any order yet to rest their guns," he said. With a report from Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

Japan open to talks on new policy

By TJ Burgonio

JAPAN is still open to a dialogue with the Philippine government regarding its new immigration policy on Filipino performing artists, which has caused a furor among talents and their managers in Manila, officials said yesterday.

The new immigration policy, which junks a Philippine government's certification of an artist's qualifications in favor of a two-year training or experience in a specific field of entertainment, is set to be enforced beginning Jan. 4, 2005.

The Philippines has proposed a five-year moratorium on the implementation of the new policy which is seen to drastically cut the number of Filipino entertainers going to Japan from 80,000 to 8,000 every year. The proposal was submitted to the Japanese government by Philippine Ambassador to Japan Domingo Siazon.

"They haven't made a decision yet [on our proposal]. They're still open to a dialogue. That's the message I'm getting from Slezon," Foreign Undersecretary Jose Brillantes said in an interview.

Foreign Secretary Alberto Romulo said Friday that he was sending Brillantes to Japan to hammer out a possible moratorium or the adoption of a transition period before the new regulation is implemented.

Resignation sought

Romulo's announcement came hours after hundreds of entertainers and their managers picketed the Department of Foreign Affairs, demanding a moratorium as well as the resignation of Romulo and Brillantes for allegedly failing to act swiftly on the issue.

Earlier, they staged similar protest rallies at the Japanese Embassy and the labor department.

The entertainers and their managers have threatened to continue their protest rallies in the coming weeks unless the Japanese government reacts positively to their demands.

"If possible, the protest rallies will continue until the Japanese government responds to the proposal," said Bernie Salinel, spokesperson of the 300-strong Philippine Overseas Entertainment Industry Foundation.

"There should be a five-year moratorium. For the meantime, the talents carrying ARBs (artist record books) should be allowed to work until they get the necessary training or experience required by the new policy," he said.

For years, Filipinos had been allowed to work as entertainers in bars and nightclubs in Japan just by presenting the ARB, a government document certifying that the holder had undergone the necessary training and testing for their dancing and singing skills.

Under the new policy, the ARB will no longer be recognized. Instead, the talents will be required to present proof of a two-year training in music or dance, or two years of experience as a singer or dancer outside Japan.

Human trafficking

The Japanese government adopted the policy on Dec. 7 after it was criticized by the US State Department for its failure to check the human trafficking in foreigners, including Filipino women who end up as commercial sex workers.

A Department of Labor and Employment official yesterday told the Japanese government that cooperation, not unilateral action, is the better option to combat human trafficking.

Undersecretary Manuel Inson, acting DOLE chief, said Tokyo's new immigration policy "reduces the areas of cooperation [and] puts solely on the shoulders of the host country the burden of stopping the victimization of entertainers."

Missing Pinoy seaman given up for dead

By TJ Burgonio

THE SIX missing crewmen, including a Filipino, of a Malaysian cargo vessel that sank in icy Alaskan waters amid stormy weather on Dec. 8 have been "presumed dead" by the US Coast Guard, foreign affairs officials said.

The crewmen, including Filipino Carlos Santiago, went missing after the helicopter that plucked them from the sinking M/V Seledang Ayu crashed in the freezing waters. Eleven other Filipinos were rescued and brought to safety.

A search team from the US Coast Guard had been scouring the waters for any sign of the missing crew but so far had come up empty-handed, the officials said.

Capt. Morrison Moris, overall coordinator of the US Coast Guard search and rescue team, confirmed the team had not found "any of the bodies." Department of Foreign Affairs spokesperson Gilberto Asuque said.

Survivors arrive in RP

"Under the circumstances, Captain Morris said the US Coast Guard considers them missing but presumed dead since there is very little chance for them to survive in the freezing waters," Asuque said in a statement.

The 11 Filipino survivors who were flown to San Francisco from Alaska after the mishap arrived in Manila on Friday to be "reunited with their families" during the holiday season, the officials said.

Evanie Maravilla, Wilfredo Alvarez, JR Briones, Jimmy Villalana, Allan Tanalgo, Vicente Vieja, Leo Alimbo, Francis Alian, Richard Bacal, Russel Luis and Juan Franco took separate flights to Manila, they said.

The 12 Filipino seamen were part of the 26-man crew of the ship. The other missing crewmen were Indians.

The 712-foot cargo vessel, registered in Malaysia and owned by IMC Pan Asian Alliance (Pre) Ltd of Singapore, ran aground off the Aleutian Islands apparently due to the stormy weather. At the time, it was carrying a cargo of grains.

Ship split in two

Shortly after, rescue teams from the US Coast Guard arrived to pick up the distressed crewmen. The ship later split in two and sank in the Alaskan seas.

The ship's owner has assured Philippine officials that Santiago and the 11 Filipino survivors would receive all benefits due them.

No place for tobacco ads, backers at Games

By Blanche S. Rivera

ATHLETES sponsored by tobacco companies or who endorse tobacco products would be disqualified from the Southeast Asian Games to be held in the Philippines next year.

Dr. Encarnita Limpin, president of the Framework Convention on Tobacco Control Alliance-Philippines (FCAP), said all 14 participating countries had agreed to ban tobacco sponsorships and endorsements as part of their commitment to tobacco-free SEA games.

FCAP, along with members of the task force on SEA Games, presented the antitobacco guidelines to representatives of the Federation Council of SEA Games in Makati in October.

Participants who violate the tobacco-free SEA Games policy, including wearing shirts endorsing tobacco companies, would be disqualified from their sport or event, Limpin said.

"Those who are caught on tobacco (endorsements or sponsorships) will be automatically disqualified," she added.

Some 8,000 athletes, 4,000 technical officials and 3,000 delegation members are expected to participate in the games.

Limpin said representatives of sports associations of all the countries welcomed the tobacco-free games next year and did not pose objections to any of the guidelines during the meeting in October.

"Everybody knows that when you're into sports, you have to lead a healthy life. They believe in the principles we presented and we're happy about that," Limpin said.

"But, they're worried about the implementation of rules and regulations," she said.

Limpin said organizers of the games would designate smoking areas in the sports venues, making sure smokers will not interfere with or disturb athletes in the ongoing games.

In a nine-page proposal submitted to the Department of Health in June, the Philippine Sports Commission said it would push for "zero sponsorship and marketing of the SEA Games with the tobacco industry in any possible form."

"This is the second time that a host country is working to keep the event tobacco-free. The first was in Vietnam during last year's games."

Gov't mulls appeal of SC order on Journal group

By Dona Z. Pazzibugan

THE PRESIDENTIAL Commission on Good Government is considering appealing the Supreme Court's order to the government to return Philippine Journalists Inc. to its former owners.

The Supreme Court en banc had ordered the return in a resolution dated Dec. 14 but said the owners, led by former majority stockholder Rosario Olivares, must first settle PJI's P33,364,889.19 debt to the state's Asset Privatization Trust.

PJI, which publishes People's Journal, People's Tonight, People's Journal International, Women's Journal, Insider and Taliba, was sequestered by the government in 1986.

The government alleged that it was part of the ill-gotten wealth of the late strongman Ferdinand Marcos' brother-in-law Benjamin "Kokoy" Romualdez.

"We're studying the Supreme Court's decision. If we find that it contravenes the opinion rendered by the Commission on Audit, we might file an appeal," said PCGG lawyer Cesar del Rosario in an interview.

Del Rosario said the law provides that public debts amounting to P50 million and above could only be condoned by Congress.

The PCGG is looking to see if the SC's decision was in effect a condonation of a debt which requires Congress' approval.

"We're still studying the Supreme Court's decision," Del Rosario reiterated.

The COA told the high court that PJI's loan stood at P60,428,390.42. But the SC upheld the PJI owners' argument that the balance of its industrial loan was only P74,984.73.

The SC nevertheless said the COA was correct in computing PJI's other loan obligations at P33,289,994.46.

As soon as the owners had fully paid their loan, the high court said, the deed of chattel mortgage issued by PJI in favor of the Development Bank of the Philippines as security for its loans, along with the supplement to the deed of assignment, should be automatically canceled.

The PCGG had lifted its sequestration of PJI years ago.

But PJI remains under the "custody" of the APT, which assumed control of the corporation's majority shares in 1986.

PJI is part of the alleged ill-gotten assets of Romualdez cited in the forfeiture case, Civil Case 0035. The case is pending before the Sandiganbayan.

Since APT is under the Office of the President, Malacañang names the directors and other top officials of PJI.

In ordering PJI's return to its private owners, the Supreme Court said the cash-strapped publishing group had only been a financial burden to the government.

PJI sustained huge losses from 1997 to 2001.

"As a result, the company has been operating with capital deficiency and by all indications is becoming another burden to the government," the SC said.

PJI obtained various dollar-denominated loans and credit accommodations from the DBP between Sept. 15, 1976, and March 31, 1981, to purchase equipment and machinery.

Sin goes home

RETIREE Manila Archbishop Jaime Cardinal Sin finally got his wish yesterday when he was released from the Cardinal Santos Medical Center in San Juan at around 11 a.m.

The cardinal, who was hospitalized for a low-grade fever, was initially confined in the intensive care unit but was transferred to a regular room after three days.

"He spent a week in confinement and every day of that week he wanted to go home. The doctors finally cleared him. He's okay, he has no more fever," said Archdiocese of Manila information officer Peachy Yamsuan over the phone yesterday.

Sin, who is wheelchair-bound, has a kidney ailment and undergoes dialysis thrice a week at his Villa San Miguel home in Mandaluyong City where he has 24-hour nursing care.

Last October, he was rushed to the Cardinal Santos Medical Center for congestive heart failure. He spent 26 days in the hospital after the doctors noticed a sudden drop in his blood pressure while undergoing dialysis at his residence.

He also suffered a stroke in March last year and was confined at the same hospital.

Sin rose to worldwide fame after instigating two bloodless people power revolts that toppled two Philippine presidents in 1986 and 2001.

He retired as Manila's longest-serving archbishop—29 years—when he turned 75 in August last year. He was replaced by former Lipa Archbishop Gaudencio Rosales. Blanche S. Rivera

THE DAILY GOSPEL

Monday, December 20, 2004
4th Week of Advent

1st Reading: Is 7:10-14
Gospel: Lk 1:26-38

In the sixth month, the angel Gabriel was sent from God to a town of Galilee called Nazareth. He was sent to a young virgin who was betrothed to a man named Joseph, of the family of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

The angel came to her and said, "Rejoice full of grace, the Lord is with you." Mary was troubled at these words, wondering what this greeting could mean.

But the angel said, "Do not fear, Mary, for God has looked kindly on you. You shall conceive and bear a son and you shall call him Jesus. He will be great and shall rightly be called Son of the Most High. The Lord God will give him the kingdom of David, his ancestor; he will rule over the people of Jacob forever and his reign shall have no end."

Then Mary said to the angel, "How can this be if I am a virgin?" And the angel said to her, "The Holy Spirit will come upon you and the power of the Most High will overshadow you; therefore, the holy child to be born shall be called Son of God. Even your relative Elizabeth is expecting a son in her old age, although she was unable to have a child, and she is now in her sixth month. With God nothing is impossible."

Then Mary said, "I am the handmaid of the Lord, let it be done to me as you have said." And the angel left her.

Commentary

Meister Eckhart had a great gift of removing names and labels from familiar things and allowing them to be mysterious again. Let's hear something from him on this familiar reading.

"If anyone were to ask me, Why do we pray, why do we fast, why do we do all our works, why are we baptized, why (most important of all) did God become incarnate?—I would answer, in order that God may be born in the soul and the soul be born in God. For that reason all the scriptures were written, for that reason God created the world and all angelic natures: so that God may be born in the soul and the soul be born in God..."

The angel was called Gabriel... He was no more called Gabriel than Conrad... 'Carpenter' is not a man's name, but his name is taken from the work of which he is a master. The angel took the name 'Gabriel' from the work of which he was a messenger, for 'Gabriel' means 'power of God'... No one can know an angel's name. No master and no understanding ever got to where an angel received his name: perhaps he is nameless...

The soul, too, has no name. Just as no one can find a true name for God, so none can find the soul's true name, although mighty tomes have been written about this. But she is given a name according as she has a regard to her activity.

In this birth God works powerfully or exerts power... In God there is plenitude of power, therefore in his birth he produces his like. All that God is in power, truth and wisdom, he bears altogether in the soul."

'Politics-free FPJ funeral'

He added: "Let's wait until the funeral is over."

One million marchers?

The Philippine National Police has prepared at least 1,000 officers to keep the peace from the time that Poe's body is moved out of Sto. Domingo until he is buried in the family plot at the North Cemetery.

"It will be our biggest preparation for a burial since that of Ninoy Aquino," said Senior Supt. Nicasio Radovan Jr., Task Force FPJ chief, referring to the funeral march for the assassinated opposition senator which was attended by at least one million people.

"We're preparing for one million people, we can handle them," Radovan said.

Poe's dear friend, deposed President Joseph Estrada, may speak during the necrological rites for his buddy on Dec. 21 at Sto. Domingo Church.

"He will most likely be asked to speak," former Sen. Vicente Sotto III said yesterday. "People expect [Estrada] to say something about FPJ."

Estrada, on trial for plunder, has received a 24-hour pass from the Sandiganbayan which would allow him to be at FPJ's wake from 9 a.m. on Tuesday to 9 a.m. Wednesday, the day of the burial, a senior police source said.

Wedding and funeral?

Sotto said the family was finalizing burial details, especially since there was a wedding set for 9 a.m. at Sto. Domingo Church on the day of the funeral. This means Poe's remains would have to be moved out before the wedding, he said.

But he said Poe's friends had

SUPPORTERS of Fernando Poe Jr. brave the heat as they line up outside the Sto. Domingo Church for a chance to view his remains. RUCY ESPERAS requested that the scheduled wedding be delayed a few hours so that the final Mass at the church could be held at 9 a.m.

At press time, Sotto did not know if the request had been granted.

In any case, Sotto said he had suggested that the final Mass at the church be held at 3 a.m. of Dec. 22, the same time the traditional Misa de Gallo is held.

Pulled by horses

He said this would allow Poe's family, friends and supporters to leave the church at 4:30 a.m. and start the funeral march thereafter.

So far, Sotto said he had learned that Susan Roces had agreed to his suggestion for the funeral march to make a stop at the sprawling FPJ Studios, which Poe acquired in the '70s.

Family friend Marichu Maceda earlier said the burial would take place before noon, in line with a family tradition.

Poe's coffin will be mounted on a carriage pulled by horses, Sotto said.

By the family's and their friends' estimate, around one million mourners may have already filed past Poe's remains as of Saturday, according to actor Rez Cortez. It was not clear how they arrived at the figure.

Palace defers honors

Rebuffed earlier by the Poe family, Malacañang has decided to defer all plans to honor President Macapagal-Arroyo's rival in the last election until after his funeral.

All these, any discussions or moves in that direction, are held in abeyance until after the burial," Communications Director Silvestre Afable said.

Malacañang and other officials earlier considered honoring Poe by conferring on him the Presidential Order of Merit and the National Artist Award, burying him at the Libingan ng mga Bayan, or lowering the flag at half-staff.

The family scoffed at the offers and questioned the motives of Malacañang after Poe was allegedly cheated out of the presidency.

Militant groups that Malacañang once branded as legal fronts for the Communist Party of the Philippines appeared to have fared better. They were allowed by the Poe family to hold a Mass for "Da King" at the Sto. Domingo Church.

Bagong Alyansang Makabayan spokesperson Renato Reyes Jr. said Bayan and the other progressive groups had coordinated with the family through the actor's longtime assistant and spokesperson Susan Tagle.

Tagle released the following schedule of services during the wake:

- Dec 19: 8 p.m.—Mass sponsored by People's Congress for Authentic Democracy.
- Dec 20: 8 p.m.—Mass
- 10 p.m.—Short prayer service, Jesus Is Lord Movement, to be officiated by Bro. Eddie Villanueva
- 11 p.m.—Tribute of volunteer groups of FPJ during the election campaign
- Dec 21: 8 p.m.—Mass sponsored by the film industry
- Midnight—Public viewing ends. Occasion is reserved for family and friends.

Security measures

As of yesterday, the PNP was mapping out plans without specific requests coming from the Poe family.

Conrad Poe said the family still had to iron out arrangements for things like portable toilets and medical units.

"We want everything to be organized," he said. "We should understand that we never expected FPJ to pass away so we were all caught by surprise." With reports from Christian V. Esguerra, Christine O. Avendaño and Norman Bordadora cause over the past 10 months, fewer people have been killed, kidnapped or raped. The number of stolen vehicles has also gone down.

All this translated to a 9.83-percent drop in crime volume from January to October compared to the same period in 2003, the PNP reported yesterday.

From a total of 71,162 incidents last year, crime volume decreased by 6,997 to 64,165.

Of the total for the 10-month period, 35,286 were "index" crimes or incidents like rape and murder that "occur with enough frequency and regularity that they serve as an index to the crime situation," according to the PNP report.

The rest were "nonindex" crimes—those that refer to smuggling, illegal gambling, child abuse and prostitution.

The PNP said index crimes decreased by 1.2 percent while non-index crimes fell 18.53 percent.

Theft up

Among index crimes, murder cases dropped 3 percent, homicide 11.58 percent, physical injury 2.72 percent, and robbery 0.68 percent. Only theft shot up, by 7.36 percent from 8,275 cases in 2003 to 8,884 in January-October this year.

Street crimes, including drug pushing and robbery, dropped to 12,623 cases from 14,667 in the same period in 2003. Of this year's cases, 11,293 were solved, reflecting an 89.46-percent crime solution efficiency.

Kidnap-for-ransom, a problem particular to the Chinese-Filipino community, seemed to have been contained this year.

Compared to last year's 77 incidents, there were only 28 reported cases this year, translating to a 64-percent decrease. Of the 28 cases, 18 were solved and 70 kidnappers were either killed or arrested.

Car theft down

The PNP also made significant gains in the drive against car thieves, a problem that has made Quezon City the country's "car theft capital." This year, there was an average of 4.3 vehicles stolen daily. The incidence of car theft dropped 33 percent from 2,159 vehicles to 1,440.

As for drug trafficking, the PNP said it had arrested 19,318 peddlers and users in 15,291 operations during the 10-month period besides dismantling 10 shabu laboratories.

The campaign against bank robbers, however, had poor results. Of the 46 cases recorded nationwide, only eight were solved.

Wreaths fit for 'Da King'

By Lulge A. del Puerto

Even the flowers would humble Da King.

As of yesterday, the family of the late Fernando Poe Jr. had received more than 150 funeral wreaths, including some from the most illustrious families and individuals in the country.

On the average, each wreath cost around P4,000, while others fetched as much as P8,000, if not more, an expert in the flower industry said.

If all the flowers were cashed in, they would amount to a total of at least P600,000—enough to buy 600 cavans of rice or build 12 houses (at P50,000 each) under a project of Gawad Kalinga, a Catholic organization.

Most of the wreaths arrived during the first two days of Poe's wake at the Sto. Domingo Church.

Two of the wreaths never got near Poe's coffin. Sent by President Macapagal-Arroyo and House Speaker Jose de Venecia, they were torn to shreds and torched by diehard Poe supporters.

"Some of these flowers are very expensive," said Jing Mirasol, operations manager of Holland Blooms.

Each stem of a South American or Ecuadorian rose, for one, costs anywhere between P300 to P500—and a wreath from a media tycoon had at least 10 of them.

The flowers were mostly orchids, lilliums, anthuriums, Malaysian mums and roses.

Some of the wreaths are considerably tall, a few others as high as 10 feet. Others are as wide as an arm's span.

The wreath from Poe's buddy, deposed President Joseph Estrada, stood at least 15 feet. Made mostly of orchids, it towered beside the gate to the church where the mourners enter.

The wreaths form two columns and guide mourners as they exit St. Martin's Chapel.

An amazed mourner, upon seeing the flowers, could not help but remark how numerous and beautiful they were.

"They are truly fit for a king!" she said.

for a live champion and found sustenance in the fiction of film rather in political reality.

Blend of fact and fiction

The search of the masses, toiling for generations in poverty and unequal opportunities, had found expression in charismatic mass-oriented leaders, such as those that occasionally emerged as champions of the masses—including the immensely popular President Ramon Magsaysay, Joseph Estrada, and now Poe.

In these persons, the "revolt of the masses" against the Filipino political elite, from whose ranks has been recruited the political leadership since the Philippine Revolution of 1896, found a vehicle.

Film was a convenient medium because it provided the fulfillment of their frustrated aspirations through the merger of reality with fantasy.

Message to the elite

The multitudes who throng the wake for Poe represent the powerful undertow driven by these unfulfilled aspirations for justice, for an honest government, and for a life lifted from the blight of poverty.

These aspirations found expression in the electoral vote for Poe, who lost the presidential election by more than one million votes.

The mass of people demonstrating their grief for him and the vote he received in May are sending a powerful message to the elite leadership that can't be ignored.

The passing of Poe does not end the masses' quest for a political leadership that can fulfill their aspirations. The masses will continue to find vehicles that can promote these aspirations. Fortunately for us, these aspirations have not been captured by the military coup plotters.

Military demagogues

The military has been identified by the masses with the elite political establishment, no less corrupt and abusive than the civilian political class.

Thus, in the search for champions, the masses have sought refuge in films and actors, who spoke their aspirations and language.

It would have far more dangerous consequences if these aspirations would be seized by military demagogues who could speak populist rhetoric.

It is so much idle talk to compare the crowds that mourned the death of Benigno Aquino Jr. and those that mourn Poe. Crowd comparisons of these two events are inappropriate. Aquino was murdered by the Marcos political establishment. Poe died of a natural cause—without human intervention.

Difference between 2 deaths

The mourning for Aquino and the massive outpouring for him represent the explosion of anger that had built up over a period of 10 years over the abuses of the Marcos dictatorship.

This pent-up rage was the reason the Aquino assassination marked the beginning of the collapse of the Marcos dictatorship.

In the case of Poe, his defeat in the election had nothing to do with his stroke. To try to blame it on the flawed election is overstating the case of looking for someone to blame for his death.

The stroke came while the Presidential Electoral Tribunal was in the process of hearing Poe's electoral protest.

While it's true that the election results came under a cloud of allegations of cheating, there is absolutely no justification for anyone to use Poe's death to stoke the resentment over the disputed election results to stir up popular unrest.

No room for agitators

In due time, the tribunal will hand down a decision. But in the meantime, there should be no interference by agitators feeding on the emotional sympathy for Poe, to frustrate the completion of the process.

The controversy over in what way Poe will be honored and recognized is entirely uncalled for.

Some outlandish proposals have been suggested—including burying him with a state funeral and flying the flag at half-staff.

There are rules for these honors. Poe did very well in his vocation in the film industry. He has been recognized with several awards associated with film.

In political terms, Poe was a catalyst. His presidential bid put to the people the issue of choosing between programs and sheer charisma.

It also showed up the flaws of the electoral system. His defeat posed a challenge to the opposition that next time around, it should do more than pin its hopes of winning power on charismatic personalities.

The outpouring of grief for Poe warns the political establishment that there is a massive, latent constituency of disadvantaged Filipinos who can easily be recruited for mobilization for political movements more dangerous than watching and identifying with films of political Robin Hoods.

Balloons, butterflies to grace KC burial plained why KC and FPJ had the same burial date.

"The family decided to bury KC on Dec. 22 because that day is a Glorious Wednesday," she said referring to the Holy Rosary's Glorious Mystery.

Gina's youngest sister, Chona Ampil, said few people bury their dead on Monday and they decided against burying KC on a "Sorrowful Tuesday."

500 butterflies

"It's purely a coincidence," she added.

Ampil said the Requiem Mass would be on Dec. 22 at 9 a.m. at the Santuario de San Antonio.

"We are requesting everyone to be there by 8:30 a.m.," she stressed. "We also want the sympathizers to exercise solemnity during the service."

Lea Salonga will sing during the Mass. This will be followed by eulogies from six of KC's closest friends and a final send-off in the parish garden.

"A thousand white balloons and 500 colorful butterflies will be released," Ampil said, adding that KC's favorite song will be played during the special rites.

Rich and famous

Politicians, Cabinet officials, businessmen, friends, classmates, relatives, bodyguards and aides comprised the close to 500 people who came to condole with the Speaker and his family over the weekend.

President Macapagal-Arroyo, who considered the death of KC a personal loss, attended Mass on Friday, the first day of the wake after the fire.

Presidential spokesperson Ignacio Bunye, Palace chief of staff Rigoberto Tiglao, PNP Director General Edgar Agilpay were seen at the wake.

San Miguel chair Eduardo "Danding" Cojuangco Jr., his wife Gretchen and son Rep. Carlos "Charlie" Cojuangco were also spotted.

PLDT chair Manny Pangilinan was there with aides and bodyguards. So were Lea Salonga, Charlene Gonzalez and Amalia Fuentes.

Seen condoling with the De Venecia couple were former Rep. Didagen "Digs" Dilangalen and Gov. Raul Daza.

"This is beyond politics, we feel for the Speaker's grief," said Dilangalen, who is also spokesperson for deposed President Joseph Estrada.

Fun room

Also present was Rep. Carlos Padilla who said that he came to condole with De Venecia, but had not yet visited the wake of his friend Fernando Poe Jr.

He wanted to pay his last respects to FPJ, but the wake, Padilla said, had become too political.

"I'm not even sure if I'm welcome there," he said.

Of course, the family didn't forget KC's classmates and friends, who gathered in a "fun room" set up by KC's cousins.

The room, next to the area where the urn was, had KC's things and memorabilia from friends and relatives, including her favorite food.

They also showed a video of the young, pretty and smart KC who had dreamed of one day going to Harvard.

President Arroyo is welcomed by TAP Labor Management Council chair Gary Aguilan in the event highlighting the ability of the Filipino to absorb the latest technology and investments for greater productivity and higher quality.

"We pledge to continuously improve quality, efficiency and always provide on-time delivery of our products."

This was the promise made by Gary Aguilan, Chairman of the Labor Management Council of Toyota Autoparts Philippines, Inc. (TAP), the parts manufacturing subsidiary of Toyota Motor Corporation in the Philippines, as the company marked the start of exports of transmission assemblies to Japan.

The celebration of a milestone was well deserved. The export of these transmission assemblies meant that they have achieved the highest quality standards of Toyota Motor Corporation of Japan.

"Toyota transmissions made in the Philippines now possess the same level of performance in terms of quality and cost as Japanese-made units," affirmed Toyota Honorary Chairman Dr. Shoichiro Toyoda.

Dr. Toyoda and Philippine President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo led ceremonies held in the company's manufacturing facility in Santa Rosa, Laguna, south of Manila. The export of transmission assemblies is also a major achievement for the developing Philippine automotive industry.

The men and women of TAP are well aware of the significance of this feat, and they want to go further.

Promising to make TAP a stronger company, Aguilan said that they "shall uphold industrial peace and prevent anything that may in any way interfere with operations."

"We commit to work hand-in-hand with management by way of open communication to enhance mutual trust and respect," said Aguilan as they vowed to support the Toyota principles of Continuous Improvement and Respect for People.

YEAREND REPORT

TOYOTA EXPORTS... LEADING THE WAY

Labor and Management cooperation achieves world-class quality
Philippine-made transmission assemblies now a major component of the Toyota Global Supply Network

These principles have put Toyota to where it is now globally. This same set of principles has positioned the Toyota Group in the Philippines atop its industry.

Guided by these ideals, the employees of the Toyota Group are known for the high quality of the products and services they deliver. They have pushed Toyota to the forefront of the Philippine automotive industry.

These same beliefs are also evident outside the workplace. Toyota's labor and management have also been successful in harmonizing common socio-economic concerns.

The cooperation that has led to long-term industrial peace and harmony is also demonstrated in Toyota's social development programs.

Employees of the Toyota Group have consistently given time and effort to programs involving environmental preservation, education, health, and community services.

The export of transmission assemblies is just one in a number of milestones already reached by the Toyota Group in the Philippines.

Many more are forecast as the employees of the Toyota Group continue their mission:

"To sustain company profitability, stability, productivity and growth by efficiently engaging in effective financial and resource management for the collective gain of the TOYOTA FAMILY and THE SOCIETY WE SERVE."

PHILIPPINE DAILY INQUIRER

and his school needs. Initially, he wanted to become a doctor. But he settled for the next best thing when he realized his parents could not afford to send him to medical school.
Tan took up nursing at the Cebu State College-Cebu City Medical Center College of Nursing (CCMC) where he graduated cum laude in 1990. While waiting for the results of the board exams, Tan volunteered to work at the CCMC, a hospital run by the city government.

In 1992, he took the Commission on Graduates of Foreign Nursing Service just to see if he would pass. He did. Then he applied for a job in the United States to find out if a hospital would be willing to hire him. Las Vegas Hospital responded.
The employment agency asked for $4,000 in placement fees and other expenses.
Realizing it was difficult for him to come up with the amount, Tan told his agency that he would not be able to go to the United States. But three months later, he received a notice from the US Embassy that his visa application had been approved.

He left on Aug. 25, 1994 with only $200 in his pocket and without any word from the hospital as to when he was supposed to start working. His parents borrowed money from relatives and friends for his airfare. He only paid a portion of the placement fees and promised the agency that he would pay the rest later.

Nightmare
Tan recalled that his first day in the United States was a nightmare. Contrary to what the agency had promised, nobody fetched him and two other CCMC nurses—Junji Navarro and Cielito Tapaya—at the Las Vegas International Airport.

After four hours of waiting and lots of prayers, he placed a collect call to his agency representative in the Philippines. It turned out the one assigned to fetch the group was in another state to pick up another nurse. They were then given phone numbers of two Filipino nurses—Joanna Delaramente and Cecilia Manay—in Las Vegas, who had arrived two months earlier.

The two asked them to take a cab to their apartment. "The thought of taxi stories from back home heightened my anxiety once more. After a long wait, we boarded a cab," Tan said.

After giving the driver the address, silence filled the cab. Then the driver asked them where they were from. Tan told him meekly "from the Philippines, Cebu."

A long pause followed. Then the driver said "kumusta...," bringing relief to the group. It turned out the driver had just come back from Cebu after marrying a Cebuana. He gave the group a quick tour of Las Vegas before bringing them to the apartment.

But the next four months proved to be a test of perseverance. Tan still had no job. He and the newcomers could not stay long with Delaramente because under the leasing law, only four adults could live in a two-bedroom apartment like hers and visitors could stay for only two weeks.

In the second week, Delaramente received an eviction notice. Then he and the others hatched a plan. Tan would hide in the closet if somebody knocked on the door. The three sometimes stayed in the mall until late in the evening so no one would know they were still staying in the apartment.

But Tan decided to make the most of the idle time. He reviewed for the nursing state board exams, with a burning desire to pass it so his family in Cebu would not think his trip was for naught.

After three weeks, the three nurses from Cebu decided to leave. Tan went with Tapaya who had a cousin in San Diego. Tan stayed there for a month, doing household chores and babysitting. Tan then went to Los Angeles and lived with his teacher, Maria Flores, who invited him in after she learned that he was in San Diego.

Penniless
Homesick and penniless, his self-esteem plunged. There were times he wanted to give up—just pass the exams and go home.

Then a card came from a friend in Cebu. Folded inside were $17 in old bills and a note: "Bai, these are the dollars I saved over time that I could share with you. Hope it will help you a little bit, Merry Christmas," Tan cried.

Finally, a call from Las Vegas Hospital came in December 1994. He started working as a nursing assistant, getting only $8 per hour. He changed diapers, bathed patients and helped them use the bedpan.

Tan started working as staff nurse when he passed his resident nurse board examination in February 1995. But he could barely sit down and eat lunch because he was assigned to take care of 32 patients.

His hard work paid off. He was named nurse supervisor, then assistant director of nursing and later director of nursing services. He was invited to join the faculty of the University and Community College System of Nevada.

Now, he is a full-time professor, teaching Medical Surgical and Psychiatric Nursing. He also runs two psychiatric clinics, along with two psychiatrists, as an advance nurse practitioner.

Compassionate
He also makes the rounds in emergency rooms in the Las Vegas valley, doing psychiatric consultation and evaluation. Tan is also a Nurse Education consultant in Nathan Adelson Hospice.

Then he developed a training program for "end of life care," which was designed to educate student nurses on how to take care of terminally ill patients like those afflicted with cancer and AIDS.
"With the nursing shortage, hospice care is in dire need of caring and compassionate nurses," Tan said. The program is now in full swing after getting a donation of close to $100,000 from the MGM-Mirage-Bellagio Casino.

In October, Tan said he was informed that he had been chosen as someone belonging to the top 5 percent of the educators in America. His story is included in the book titled "Who's Who Among America's Top Teachers."

Tan knows how to spread his blessings. Last year, he and Tapaya formed the Maria Libron Flores Nursing Scholarship Foundation in honor of the teacher who allowed him to stay in Los Angeles. The foundation provides scholarship to two nursing students.

He also started the Yolanda Alforque-Tan Scholarship Foundation, a high school scholarship named after his mother. Tan said he would pay the secondary education of at least two poor graduates of San Nicolas Elementary School, where his mother had taught until she retired.

He also plans to put up a Hospice Care Center in Cebu, which will provide care to terminally ill patients.

"It's ang mga parol ng sam-bayanang Pilipino at sana magn-ing ang mga ito buong taon (These are the lanterns of the Filipino nation, and I hope they shine throughout the year)," he said.

Bayanihan spirit

Ambassadors Mario Schuff of Argentina, Jorge Montero of Chile, as well as the American and Japanese consuls, their families and friends were there for the event.

Mayor Oscar Rodriguez told guests that the lanterns were the products of craftsmen and their families in the villages of San Fernando, dubbed as the "Christmas capital of the Philippines."

"The lanterns you see now were made in the spirit of bayani-han (cooperation)," Rodriguez said of the hard work of residents of Barangays San Juan, San Jose, Dolores, Sta. Lucia, Sto. Niño, San Nicolas, Del Pilar, Sto. Rosario and San Felipe.

"Like the Star of Bethlehem that led the Three Magi to the humble manger of Christ more than 2,000 years ago, they symbolize hope for the renewal of faith in God and love for others," Rodriguez said.

Lantern performance

The lantern makers worked three months to produce the masterpieces of Christmas art. The city government gave each village P110,000, while residents contributed money for materials and food expenses of the craftsmen.

In the first round, the nine lanterns "performed" to the tune of different melodies lasting five minutes each.

In the second round, the lanterns were divided into three groups and each group "performed" for three minutes each.

In the third and last round, nine lanterns performed simultaneously for two minutes.

The audience, standing shoulder to shoulder, composed mostly of families, were awed by the visual performance.

One minute, the lanterns were stars, flowers or jewels. The next minute, they were one magnificent assemblage of patterns.

What was equally amazing was that the lanterns twinkled and changed color in time with the music, whether it was a traditional marching tune, a Yuletide carol or the Sex Bomb Christmas melody.

Craftsmen say the "magic engine" of every giant lantern is its rotor, an aluminum sheet rolled into a barrel. To maneuver it, a used car wheel is attached to the barrel.

The barrel is also equipped with a main switch that is connected to an electrical outlet.

How they do it

But how do craftsmen design the lighting pattern?

Selected surfaces of the barrel are covered with masking tape. This way, only the exposed portions have contact with electricity.

Hairpins act as conductors of electricity from the barrel to the bulbs. Electric wires are hooked to the hairpins that are neatly welded in a row on a steel bar just below the barrel. The wires, in turn, are connected to the light bulbs fitted inside the lantern.

When a barrel's switch is turned on, and the barrel is twisted in a particular direction, a specific set of bulbs lights up.

A lantern can have 4 to 10 rotors, depending on the complexity of its design.

The illusion of dancing lights is, however, achieved by the adeptness of the rotor operators.

These men, whose hands hold the wheels, actually dance to the accompanying music to get the right tempo for the lanterns.

And the winner is Everything depends on creativity and the human touch, lantern designer Roland Quiambao said, adding that it would be hard to achieve the same effect if one were to computerize the rotor.

Thirteen judges chose Quiambao's entry, the San Felipe lantern, as the most beautiful this year. This was the second consecutive year that the village of San Felipe won the much-coveted championship trophy.

The lanterns of the villages of Sto. Rosario and San Jose came in second and third, respectively.

The festival traces its roots to religious traditions introduced by the Augustinian Order.

From simple candles and oil lamps wrapped in intricate paper or metal housing, the lanterns evolved into lubenos.

The lubenos are lanterns fashioned in the shape of birds, fishes and stars. Mounted on bamboo poles, they light the paths of the patron saints during processions.

The lanterns got bigger and more intricate when the town got electricity in the 1930s.

Not so festive Christmas for local decor makers

tries whose lower costs are stealing buyers away.

The irony is that the Philippines, a predominantly Christian country where Christmas is one of the most important events of the year, is losing ground to countries which regard it in commercial terms only.

The Philippines' share of the market has been slipping since the late 1990s. Department of Trade and Industry figures say that in 1997, the Philippines accounted for 1.91 percent of the $4.3 billion worth of Christmas decoration exports worldwide.

By 2001, that figure had slipped to 1.06 percent of the total, although the market had grown to $5.41 billion worldwide.

China has been the No. 1 exporter of Christmas decorations since the 1990s with the Philippines ranking ninth, behind even Taiwan and Thailand.

Falling exports

From $69 million worth of Christmas decorations exports in 1999, the Philippines saw this figure fall to $58 million by 2001. China saw its exports grow from $4.08 billion to $4.319 billion in the same period.

Marlene Villareal, head of the Christmas Decor Producers and Exporters Association of the Philippines, said the Sept. 11, 2001 terror attacks in the United States and foreign travel advisories about potential terrorism here hurt the industry further, discouraging foreign buyers from visiting to look at samples.

Philippine manufacturers can rarely afford to take all their samples to trade shows abroad, said Tami Filler-Leung, president of Tamilee Decors, an industry leader.

But Villareal said: "The main reason we are really losing is that a lot of our buyers started shifting their orders from us to China because they (the Chinese) can copy our designs and offer it at one-third a price of ours."

The Christmas decorations industry had been a success story for the Philippines just a decade ago, particularly since its growth was spearheaded by small, cottage industries.

Many of the companies began with people making decorations in their own homes, only to find themselves expanding as Western buyers took notice of the fine craftsmanship and original designs.

Typical producer

Filler-Leung is a typical producer who started off making decorations for friends. After joining a trade show out of curiosity, she found an eager foreign buyer in 1987 and quickly expanded.

Her home was transformed into an impromptu factory. "We had boxes in our bedroom. The only place I could sit quietly was in the toilet," she recalled.

At its peak, Tamilee Decors employed 1,000 people. Today, her company only employs about half that number.

Many of the other companies are still small, employing only 10-20 employees. They rely on subcontractors who often work from home, Villareal said.

Philippine manufacturers, who rely on hand-made products, cannot compete with China's low labor costs; not to mention low power rates and huge raw material supplies, Villareal said.

As a result, some Filipino decor makers have already set up operations in China, she added.

But Villareal remains hopeful the Philippines can regain some lost ground with its higher-quality product.

"What I noticed is that starting this year, some of the buyers who moved to China are coming back to the Philippines," she said.

Better Philippine designs and quality should be an advantage in reaching the high-end market with such products like wreaths, ornate table-top Christmas baskets, candelabra and large figurines of angels and the Nativity scene, Villareal said.

"A lot of the buyers who are more discriminating continued buying from us," she recalled.

The cultural affinities of the Westernized, Christianized, English-speaking Filipinos are also an advantage.

Understanding West

"The Filipinos understand Christmas. We understand how the West thinks, the pace of the West. We know what the buyers really like," Villareal said.

Filler-Leung, however, warns that some of her designers have been lured away to work in China. To bring down costs, Philippine decorations manufacturers are cooperating instead of competing, with common sourcing of raw materials, sharing of subcontractors and even helping supply each other for large orders, Villareal said.

Philippine manufacturers should find a niche such as with limited edition products. "There are specialty stores that don't like the manufactured look," Filler-Leung said.

"We have friends in China who have been enticing us to go to China and set up a factory there," she added.

But she said "my husband and I set up this business for the Philippines and to give jobs to the Filipino people."

If they can no longer remain viable in the Philippines, "we will probably not go to China. We will just retire," Filler-Leung said.

Saddam trial process opens with grilling of 'Chemical Ali'

BAGHDAD—War crimes trials against Saddam Hussein and his closest lieutenants moved forward on Saturday when his feared cousin known as "Chemical Ali" was the first to face a formal interview with the chief investigating magistrate.

Iraq's US-backed government had promised trials would begin before next month's election, the first free vote since Saddam rose to power three decades ago. But the judge stressed his meetings with Ali Hassan al-Majid and the former Defense Minister Sultan Hashem were just the start of a long process.

"Hurrying will not help this case," Raed Juhdi said.

Official and silent film of the two hearings showed both men looking relaxed, chatting and smiling under guard. Majid leaned on a walking stick, possibly still suffering from wounds sustained while on the run from invading US forces last year.

Some Iraqi officials have dismissed the publicity as little more than an election campaign ploy by Prime Minister Iyad Allawi. However that may be, the 67-year-old ousted dictator and his aides have now been given access to lawyers.

After brief appearances in July to hear possible charges of crimes against humanity and genocide against Kurds gassed by troops under Majid's control, the formal process of deciding who is tried for what is under way, a year after Saddam was caught.

The Jan. 30 election will furnish a national assembly that will draw up a new constitution and, Washington hopes, give Iraq a legitimate government to replace the de facto US rule that filled the vacuum left by the overthrow of the Baath Party.

US officials concede an insurgency among Saddam's Sunni Arab minority poses the major threat to the chances of forming a representative legislature. Three election offices in Sunni northern Iraq came under attack in the latest incidents.

Two people were killed and eight were wounded, including six National Guards, when mortars landed on an election office in Dujail, 50 km north of Baghdad. It is one of many around the country registering and educating voters.

A mortar also landed on an election office in the northern oil capital of Kirkuk, where ethnic tensions among Arabs, Kurds and Turks are high ahead of a poll many want delayed locally.

National Guards fought off gunmen who attacked an election office 60 km southwest of Kirkuk.

Saboteurs who are hampering efforts to restore Iraq's oil wealth and contributing to a cold winter without heat and light for many, blew up a key oil export pipeline near Kirkuk, halting flows for the second time in a week.

In the big northern city of Mosul, scene of widespread bloodshed in recent weeks, seven children in a school bus were hit when a roadside bomb missed a US patrol. One child died.

The Turkish foreign ministry said several guards from its Baghdad Embassy were killed in Mosul on Friday and others were missing. Witnesses saw four people killed in one car, apparently Turks.

"We recognize that there are some real concerns," a Western official, briefing reporters this week on condition of anonymity, said of the need to secure an election for which US troop numbers are being increased by some 10 percent to 150,000.

Asked what would happen if, as some Sunni leaders fear and others are encouraging, the 20 percent Sunni Arab minority stays or is kept away from the polling stations, the official said: "Clearly we want a representative assembly. What will happen if there isn't sufficient Sunni participation for this to be representative I wouldn't want to speculate."

A lack of Sunni voters would boost the share of the Shiite 60 percent and the Kurds, who account for up to 15 percent.

Shiite clerics have rejected accusations from Allawi's secular allies that they are a stalking horse for Iranian-style rule by Shiite ayatollahs—a line taken up by US officials who say Iraqi clerics prefer secular rule.

President George W. Bush has already warned US adversaries in Tehran not to interfere.

Juhdi told reporters there was no set timetable for the trials, each of which will be prepared by different judges.

Majid and Hashem appeared in turn, both being released from handcuffs and seated on a folding chair in a bare room before Juhdi's desk, on which lay a Koran wrapped in green cloth.

Juhdi, who presided over the brief hearings for Saddam and the others in July, said both men on Saturday had legal counsel.

ISRAELI armored vehicles roll toward the Khan Yunis refugee camp in the Gaza strip from a military staging area in the Gush Katif settlement bloc, Dec. 18. The incursion followed a bomb attack by Palestinian militants last Sunday that left five Israeli soldiers dead near a border crossing into Egypt at Rafah, also in southern Gaza. AP

Israel pulls out of Gaza after killing 11 Palestinians

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip—Israeli troops moved out of a Palestinian refugee camp in southern Gaza on Saturday night, the army said, ending a two-day raid that killed 11 Palestinians and wounded dozens, the largest Israeli military operation since Yasser Arafat's death last month.

The raid in Khan Yunis was launched Friday in response to Palestinian mortar and rocket attacks over the past week. Israel had said it would refrain from major offensives in the run-up to the Jan. 9 Palestinian elections, but would take action if attacked.

Meanwhile, Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's Likud Party and the opposition Labor Party worked to finalize their pact to form a coalition government amid reports the new Cabinet—which Sharon seeks to bolster his government as he carries out a planned Gaza withdrawal—could be sworn in as early as Thursday.

Residents of Khan Yunis said they saw 10 Israeli tanks pulling out of the area Saturday evening. Palestinian security confirmed the troops had left.

In the Khan Yunis fighting Saturday, two militants were killed by Israeli tank fire in separate incidents, Palestinian hospital officials said. The body of a third Palestinian shot in the head was recovered Saturday morning, medical officials said. It was unclear whether he was a militant.

A total of 11 Palestinians, including at least seven militants, were killed and 43 others wounded, since Israeli tanks and bulldozers entered the camp Friday. A Palestinian ambulance driver and five children under the age of 16 were among the wounded. One Israeli soldier also was wounded.

Hundreds of residents who had evacuated their homes began returning to the camp even though the area was engulfed in complete darkness because the electric grid had been damaged in the operation. Some residents found their homes demolished or damaged but officials said it was not immediately clear how many.

The mid was in response to more than 50 mortar and rocket attacks launched by Palestinians over the past week which killed a Thai worker in a Jewish settlement and injured 17 other people, including 11 soldiers, the army said.

The army said some houses used by militants to launch mortars or rockets were targeted in the operation.

On Saturday, Palestinian militants in northern Gaza launched three homemade rockets, two of which landed in Israel but caused no injuries or damage, the army said.

Under the Likud-Labor coalition plan, Labor leader Shimon Peres would become vice premier, a post he would share with Likud Cabinet Minister Ehud Olmert. AP

Sale of $3-B Hong Kong property faces collapse

HONG KONG—The fate of a US$3-billion real estate privatization scheme hung in the balance Sunday as the government tried to prevent a potentially embarrassing collapse of the world's largest property trust sale.

The launch of the planned sell-off of 180 shopping malls and 79,000 car parking spaces on public housing estates has been thrown into serious doubt by an elderly female tenant who challenged the decision in court.

Senior government officials including chief executive Tung Chee-hwa and Financial Secretary Henry Tang met for another crisis meeting Sunday morning to decide whether the listing would go ahead on Monday as planned.

But Tang said Saturday the chance of seeing the scheme going ahead was "slim" given the legal uncertainties.

Local press, citing unnamed sources, reported that the government had decided to pull out of the controversial privatization scheme due to the "high risks" involved as the prospectus of the sale did not mention possible legal challenges.

It would only go ahead if the resident promised not to take the case to the Court of Final Appeal, they said.

An announcement was originally due at 4 p.m. on Sunday but it has been pushed back due to "legal problems," a Housing Authority spokesperson said.

On Friday the city's highest court, the Court of Final Appeal, allowed 67-year-old Lo Siu-lung 28 days to lodge an appeal against lower court decisions which upheld the authority's right to privatize the assets.

The pensioner was seeking a judicial review of the listing of the so-called Link Real Estate Investment Trust (REIT) claiming the deal undervalues public assets, short-changes the public and threatens to lead to rent rises for public housing tenants.

Outspoken legislator Emily Lau criticized the government's handling of the listing.

"They have known a long time ago that there has been public discontent about the sale. They should deal with this problem first but they chose to ignore people's voices," she told AFP.

Lau, head of pro-democracy group the Frontier, also blamed the lack of transparency as the root cause of the difficulties.

"The Frontier has tried to discuss with them about the plan for a long time but that was also ignored. When we did get a chance to speak to them, they did not want to disclose much information. I hope they have learned their lesson now," she said.

Andrew To, a district councillor and one of Lo's representatives, blamed what he called an undemocratic government for the hurdles.

"There has been a lot of criticism about the sale. The legislators have told the government to pull out and there have been talks about judicial review, yet they went ahead with it without public consensus," he said.

To said even scrapping the listing would cause less damage than going ahead as more lawsuits could be filed against it.

A fresh lawsuit was heard by the High Court Saturday evening as a disgruntled investor sought urgent leave to apply for a judicial review and the return of her money.

But her application was promptly rejected by the court. It ruled her case covered a private and civil matter and that she should seek compensation with the Link REIT instead. AFP

Thai PM links Indonesia to southern unrest

THAKSIN speaking to the American Chamber of Commerce in Bangkok Dec. 16.

BANGKOK—Thailand's Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra has blamed radicals in Indonesia for fomenting unrest in the kingdom's troubled south where more than 560 people have died this year, media reported Sunday.

The premier has already angered neighboring Malaysia by charging that some Islamic militants waging the insurgency were trained across the border in Malaysia.

Adding Indonesia to the list, Thaksin on Saturday said masterminds of the southern violence were being inspired by extremists there, often while studying at Islamic schools, the Nation newspaper said.

During his radio address to the nation Saturday Thaksin also said some ringleaders had received training in Indonesia.

"They got radical ideas from studying in Indonesia or from friends in Indonesia and then trained in Indonesia and Malaysia," he said.

However, Thaksin said the governments of Indonesia and Malaysia stood firmly against terrorism and had fully cooperated with Thailand in seeking to end the conflict in the kingdom's south.

Malaysian Prime Minister Abdullah Ahmad Badawi on Sunday reportedly denied that Thai Muslim insurgents were being trained in Malaysia and chided the Thai premier for making such "sensational" claims.

"Malaysia is not a base to be used by any group to make plans against any country. We will not allow our country to be used as a base," Abdullah was quoted as saying in Dubai by the Sunday Star newspaper.

Abdullah said he was disappointed Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra did not use diplomatic channels to air his claims.

"I was shocked to read about it. If Thaksin had such information and we don't know about it, he should have passed it over to us officially through proper diplomatic channels," Abdullah said.

The Thai premier on Saturday said some of the militants had been trained in Malaysia's Kelantan state.

Kelantan is the only Malaysian state ruled by the opposition Islamic Party and shares a border with the southern provinces of mainly Buddhist Thailand.

Earlier this month a Malaysian lawmaker claimed that the outlawed Pattani United Liberation Organization, which is fighting for a separate Islamic state in southern Thailand, had received 120,000 ringgit ($31,500) from the Kelantan state branch of the Malaysian Islamic Welfare Organization.

Muslims represent about 5 percent of the overwhelmingly Buddhist population of Thailand but have long complained of discrimination.

Thailand's sporadic separatist insurgency was rekindled at the start of the year and since then Buddhists, officials and security forces have been targeted by militants.

Thai security sources have warned Islamic militants are planning major attacks in Bangkok and southern Thai provinces in January to mark the first anniversary of the insurgency.

Thai MP faces prison term for airing riot video

BANGKOK—A Thai opposition parliamentarian could face up to seven years in prison for airing a video showing security forces suppressing a riot which led to the deaths of 87 Muslim protesters, police said Sunday.

Democrat MP Thanin Jaisamut has been called in for questioning and will be arrested if he denies showing the video of the Tak Bai tragedy while campaigning in the restive south this month, said police in the southern district of Langu.

"The video is a violation of national security," Langu police chief Chote Chaichompoo told AFP, adding Thanin could spend up to seven years in jail if charged and convicted of the crime of "violating national security."

Thai authorities have urged opposition politicians to stop publicizing videos showing security forces suppressing a riot at Tak Bai near the border with Malaysia, saying the images damaged national unity.

The Oct. 25 Tak Bai riot led to the deaths of at least 87 Muslim protesters, most of whom died from suffocation after being detained, bound and piled into the backs of army trucks. The tragedy sparked an international outcry.

Video from the riot in the Muslim-dominated southern province of Narathiwat emerged on the open market recently. Officials have reportedly accused politicians of doctoring the footage to tarnish the government's reputation before national elections next Feb. 6.

Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra has slammed the video saying its distribution could lead to further division within the kingdom, which is mainly Buddhist.

Couple showed off baby cut from mother's womb

MEIVERN, Kansas—A woman charged with killing an expectant mother and cutting the baby from her womb was showing the child off to people at a cafe and to her pastor hours before she was arrested, residents said Saturday.

Lisa M. Montgomery, 36, was charged Friday with kidnapping resulting in murder and was expected to appear in federal court Monday. The baby, whose mother had been eight months pregnant, was in good condition.

Hours before her arrest, Montgomery and her husband showed off a newborn girl at a restaurant, said Kathy Sage, owner of the Whistle Stop Cafe in Meivern, a small eastern Kansas town.

Many customers were surprised to hear the infant was only a day old, Sage said. She knew a special alert had been issued for a baby missing from Missouri but did not realize the infant the Montgomerys carried was connected until hearing from a reporter on Friday.

"You read about this stuff," she said. "It blows you away when it's here. This stuff is supposed to be in New York City or Los Angeles."

Montgomery was arrested later in the death of Bobbie Jo Stinnett, who was found Thursday in a pool of blood inside her small white home in the northwest Missouri town of Skidmore.

Montgomery's husband, Kevin, has not been charged in the case.

The arrest stunned many in this community of about 420 residents who apparently had believed for months that Lisa Montgomery was pregnant.

While the Montgomerys ate breakfast Friday, another customer showed the baby off around the cafe. After eating, they took the girl to visit their pastor.

"It was a beautiful baby," Mike Wheatly said. "Absolutely beautiful."

Wheatly and his wife commented that the baby, whom the couple called Abigail, did not look like a newborn because her head was not misshapen from passing through the birth canal, a common result of childbirth that soon goes away. The only marks she had were a small scratch on her head and a slight bruise on her hand.

Bias

PERCEPTIONS have their own reality. This is what we must remember when we take the measure of a Filipino icon like Fernando Poe Jr. It is also what we must keep in mind when we seek to understand his widow's angry and startling accusations of media bias.

The redoubtable Susan Rocas did not mince words when she berated the ABS-CBN network for alleged bias in its news coverage. "Hindi ko kikukimin ang sama ng loob ko (I will not suppress my hurt feelings)," she said. "People don't want to watch your news coverage because you capitalize on personal hurt," she told Karen Davila, the new anchor of "TV Patrol World."

In such cases involving personal hurt, perceptions harden almost into religious truths. For those who share them, no explanation is necessary; for those who don't, no explanation is possible.

To be sure, Rocas did offer an explanation (echoed the next day by opposition leader Sen. Aquilino Pimentel Jr.). She complained about ABS-CBN's use of "tight shots" during the campaign, which tended to minimize or ignore the size of FPJ's adoring crowds. "You did not show the crowd, you weren't showing the people," she said.

This is a serious accusation, made more so by its specificity. But Rocas' outburst was not the first time it was raised. In truth, almost every media organization received this kind of complaint from the Poe camp once the campaign started. It would not be unfair to Poe's media handlers to state bluntly that, instead of yet more questions about Poe's lack of a platform leading the news stories, they would have preferred photos or footage of the day's crowds.

Certainly, if what Rocas meant was that ABS-CBN did not give the Poe presidential campaign the Erap treatment, she would be completely in the right. The television network that has helped elect several senators and at least one vice president did not cover Poe this year the way it covered his bosom buddy Joseph Estrada from the 1998 election right up to the deposed president's impeachment trial in 2000.

This makes ABS-CBN a victim of its own past practices. But there were in fact many times during this year's campaign that the network was thought to be biased for FPJ.

Let us cite only one instance. The first major crisis the Poe campaign confronted was the series of disqualification cases filed against the candidate; any propaganda value from the cases, however, was quickly countered by an even more sensational allegation: that the incriminating documents against Poe were reportedly forged by a group under the direction of Ricardo Manapat, the director of the National Archives then.

In the Senate hearings conducted and then hurriedly concluded by Poe supporter Sen. Edgardo Angara, employees of the National Archives emerged to serve as hostile witnesses to Manapat.

ABS-CBN was not remiss in its coverage of both the scandal and the hearings. More to the point, it did not fail to run favorable stories about the witnesses. The preferential treatment reached its height when a network reporter followed three witnesses, then under Senate custody, on their triumphant if temporary return to the National Archives. The three were feted at every turn, receiving encouragement from what seemed like the entire agency, from the moment they arrived to the time they left. But why did the witnesses return that particular day? The real answer became clear only at the very end of the report, when the witnesses, waiting at the building's driveway, filed back into an ABS-CBN service vehicle.

A careful viewer would have reached only one conclusion: The witnesses had been brought back to their office, and were now being returned to the Senate, by the network itself, for the sake of the story.

But judging from Rocas' remarks last week, this instance of anti-Manapat (and thus pro-Poe) coverage is not something Poe's supporters appreciate, or even remember.

And thus we come to the blind side of perceptual thinking: we only see what we want or are conditioned to see. We do not remember our neighbor's hundred acts of kindness; we only notice the one unfortunate exchange of words. We do not notice the thousands of policemen doing their duty; we only see the cops who take bribes. That, sadly, is the reality.

People's hope may have died with FPJ

LIKE Macbeth who was terrified by the ghost of Banquo, the administration of President Macapagal-Arroyo is terrified by the dead Fernando Poe Jr. So terrified that it is contradicting itself by dangling so many consuelos de bobo to appease his grieving, angry family and supporters. First, it offered to make Poe a National Artist for the movies. Then it offered to bury him in the Libingan ng mga Bayani, which is reserved only for national heroes. When the offers were not accepted, it proposed flying the Philippine flag at half-mast, and when told that this cannot be done legally, it proposed giving Poe a Presidential Medal of Merit to make it legal.

The administration is contradicting itself. The National Artist award is limited only to true-blue Filipinos, that is why the award is called "National." Likewise, the Libingan ng mga Bayani is reserved only for Filipino heroes. But has the administration forgotten that it claims FPJ is not a Filipino?

That was its argument in the disqualification case against FPJ, and that was also its argument against FPJ's poll protest in the Presidential Electoral Tribunal.

Which leads us to repeat the question of FPJ's widow, Susan Rocas: What happened to the bureau director who falsified FPJ's birth papers to make it appear that he was not a Filipino? The fellow has been charged with perjury and falsification of public documents a long time ago, but what happened to these cases? Chief State Prosecutor Jovencito Zuñiga says he doesn't have them, and nobody else in the Department of Justice knows where they are. The accused himself cannot be located. Is it any wonder that Susan is angry?

An indication of the anger of FPJ's fans is when they tore to pieces the wreaths sent by the President and by Speaker Jose de Venecia to Sto. Domingo Church. The President has also sent feelers to the family that she would like to pay her last respects to her fallen presidential rival, but they were rebuffed. Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye was earlier sent to the Ar-

SUSAN Rocas gave out two interviews last week that showed a contrast in moods. Both made me wonder what madness persuaded Fernando Poe Jr.'s handlers to take the tack they did during the campaign—keeping him and his wife away from the more serious public forums. I don't know how articulate FPJ is, but Susan Rocas is obviously so.

Her interviews during the past week should also dispel the wrongheaded notion that Tagalog is inadequate to express thoughts and feelings. There are no inadequate languages, there are only inadequate speakers. Rocas rose to heights of eloquence completely effortlessly during her interviews talking in Tagalog. What is eloquence anyway but speaking from the heart?

In the first interview, Rocas was gracious in the extreme. Yes, she said, she was still going to find joy this Christmas. That is how it has always been with her. She came from a poor family and learned early in life to make the best of what she had. When they were kids, every time someone in her family had a birthday and they didn't have money, they just bought a piece of cake. But they made sure to put a candle on it. Yes, she'll still celebrate Christmas. Her husband won't be there physically, but he'll still be there in spirit. She'll make the best of what she has.

FPJ, she said, never misrepresented himself when he ran for president. He never passed himself off as someone other than what he was. He was a school dropout who rose to the top of his profession through talent and hard work. He was a man with a good heart who had helped others before and wanted to help more. Better someone like that than people who used their heads only to oppress others.

She thought the crowd that tore to shreds the wreath sent by President Macapagal-Arroyo were wrong to do so. But she had no dominion over people's hearts. Her husband himself had been much affected by what happened in the elections. Someone is robbed of his money, he can always make it another day. Someone is robbed of his dreams, he is robbed of his life.

In the second interview, Rocas was furious in lington funeral parlor in Pasig to feel the pulse of the family and crowd, and he was disappointed. I felt so sorry for him as I watched him on television bravely walking through the hostile crowd, face set in a grim smile, knowing he was in enemy territory.

Everybody expects emotions and tempers to flare up during the funeral on Dec. 22. The parallelism between the assassination of Ninoy Aquino and the sudden death of Poe is not lost on the administration. It was the death of Ninoy that sparked Edsa I, that led to the people chasing the Marcoses out of Malacañang. It is possible that FPJ's funeral, if not handled right, could lead to the same end. Maybe not immediately, but it could fuel a smoldering anger that could explode like a volcano in a popular uprising later against the already very unpopular President Arroyo.

The parallelism does not end there. Although not yet proven, the people suspected that the Marcos administration was behind Ninoy's assassination. This time, people believe that FPJ was cheated out of the presidency, although that still has to be proven in the PET.

Indeed, judging from the millions of people flocking to FPJ's wake, and the national outpouring of grief and sorrow at his sudden death, one wonders how he could have lost the elections. The antics of the pro-administration members of Congress blocking all attempts to look deeper into the certificates of canvass, and the extreme slowness of the PET in acting on FPJ's electoral protest, only strengthened the belief that he was cheated.

Four one hurt after another on an already suffering people and it is like playing with fire beside a pile of dynamite sticks.

It is said that the Filipinos are a patient people. Because they always cling to hope—even the poorest of the poor and the desperate among them—to pull them through. FPJ was a beacon of hope. Just as he was hope personified in the movies where he was the hero who always came to the rescue and triumphed in the end against villains. And he was a hero to them not only in the movies but also in real life. With his death, the people's hope of deliverance from oppression, injustice and poverty also died. Without hope, people resort to reckless and dangerous means, like the amoks who try to take with them to hell as many of their perceived tormentors as they can.

All these cannot be lost on the administration. I am sure they are discussing this in Malacañang. Which explains all the efforts at appeasement.

The FPJ crowds know the government is trying to appease them but they are not biting. Appeasement is not the same as sincerity. In the same way that a sinner cannot be forgiven unless he confesses his sins and sincerely repents. A prisoner cannot be given amnesty unless he admits his crime. People want sincerity from the administration.

the extreme. Probably out of tiredness, probably out of seeing all the people who had wronged them during the elections simulating commiseration, she lashed out. Particularly at the one TV station she believed had wronged them the most. She did not mince her words, reducing Karen Davila to tears. The reason people are not watching ABS-CBN news, she told Davila, was not only that it aired late but that it was false. Among others, it falsified the attendance in FPJ's campaign. "Why did you say nobody went to his rallies when you could see for yourself the crowds that pushed their way there?"

Rocas said a good deal more, but it is by now widely known. It was shown in several networks that night—among them ABS-CBN—and was the headline of newspapers next day. She ended on a conciliatory note, however, saying if God could forgive, who was she not to?

Well, I myself was wondering how long it would take before she snapped at the sight of all the media that had slammed the door on her husband while he was alive and seeking to become a tenant of Malacañang, but were now pushing and shoving to get ahead of the line while her husband waited to occupy the cold earth. More than the elections, this was a test of epic proportions, and FPJ's widow passed it with flying colors. The colors of grief and anger. Whether contemplative or explosive, she looked eminently presidential.

That is so particularly if we define "presidential" by the one characteristic that should attend it but has been stripped from it these past years: honesty. Honesty is the one thing that has been defiled horrendously in this country, lying becoming a hallmark of presidential ambition, deception becoming the handmaiden of presidential conduct. Honesty is the one thing that has been cheapened violently in this country, pundits applauding demonstrations of unscrupulousness, calling it the height of political savvy, and self-proclaimed "empower-ers" of the people choosing to play the roles of blind court monkeys.

What made Rocas look spectacularly presidential was just that: she was honest. A monumental irony for the fact that she is an actor, as was her husband. She and her husband had played many roles in their lives, but as it turned out, they had not forgotten to play themselves. She and her husband had played the role of bidas in their movies, but as it turned out they had never advertised themselves as such in real life. The day before Rocas lambasted ABS-CBN, I saw Aladin Bacolodan touring FPJ's house and standing on a pile of relief goods that FPJ had been gathering to give to the typhoon victims. None of the goods carried his name. It was never his habit to do that, Bacolodan said. FPJ preferred to remain nameless when he gave.

These are gracious folk in these ungracious times. These are honest folk in these dishonest times. I don't know that honesty alone makes for a great president, but I do know it is the precondition for being one. Honesty in a president is the only assurance the citizen has he's not getting a raw deal, whether he agrees with her or not. No, it is his only assurance he has a president, and not a non-actor who's just playing the part.

What can I say? Susan for president.

Our concert for the typhoon victims is tonight at Conspiracy Café in Visayas Avenue. As of this writing, the artists are: Dong Abay, Cynthia Alexander, Johnny Alegre, Noli Aurlilio, Joey Ayala, Bayang Barrios, Noel Cabangon, Cooky Chua, Mon David, Susan Fernandez, Gary Granada, Paolo Santos, Pido, Ria Villena, Chikoy Pura, Tots Tolentino. Legacy from KC's tragic death

WHEN the residence of Speaker Jose de Venecia in Dasmariñas Village burned down, trapping his youngest daughter KC inside the house, some 20 members of the House of Representatives rushed there upon hearing the news. One of the earliest to arrive was Bukidnon Rep. Miguel Zubiri. I had a chance to chat with him at the wake for KC in Santuario de San Antonio. Zubiri reiterated what the Speaker had stressed to the media: The fire-fighting units that responded to the emergency were woefully inadequate in terms of equipment.

JDV had stressed that Makati Mayor Jejomar Binay was so helpful to them in trying to rescue KC. Binay joined the De Venecias in those desperate moments as they tried to enter the burning house, braving the extreme heat and fumes. But they had to retreat as the heat proved unbearable. JDV tried a third time with the firemen, but again he was unable to stand the heat; by that time the ceiling of the house and the wooden second floor had caved in. Later JDV mused to the media that if the Makati Fire Department had only one or two asbestos suits for the firemen, his daughter might have been saved.

Zubiri noted that the MFD, supposedly the most modern in the country, doesn't have even a single asbestos suit; it has no gas masks (only surgical masks), no iron grill cutters and no floodlights and flashlights even. In fact, the firemen had to borrow floodlights from a TV crew. Because of inadequate equipment, the firefighters had to seek entrance to the house from the grand staircase which was engulfed in flames, instead of cutting through the grills at the side of the room where the girl was. JDV also observed that the fire trucks would run out of water and then wait for those that had water. At that instant, he mused, every moment counted in saving his daughter's life.

The report of such inadequacy is simply appalling, for if this is the case with the firefighters of Makati, the richest city in the country, one can imagine how the other fire teams in other places are. Brother Eddie Villanueva, who came to pray over the De Venecia couple and the remains of their child, recalled how thousands of people in a Bulacan municipality watched helplessly as six children burned inside a house because the firemen couldn't get through the grilled windows. But Makati, where the biggest taxpayers are located, has no excuse in not having the latest fire-fighting equipment and technology. Let's hope Mayor Binay would fit his firefighters with first-class and ultramodern equipment, so that Makati's fire team could also help nearby towns and cities that cannot afford them.

Tragedy that befell JDV's daughter and his residence has highlighted the need for more modern fire-fighting equipment, the Speaker told the media through his grief. Inasmuch as the fire in his residence was said to have originated from overheated Christmas tree lights, JDV also sent a message to the nation's families to observe an accident-free holiday season by using Christmas lights in a safer manner. He said that he intends to allocate about P15 million in the newly approved budget to equip at least each city a couple of asbestos suits. The House members who witnessed the tragedy in Dasmariñas Village last Thursday night urged the Speaker to make the modernization of our fire-fighting equipment KC's legacy.

The tragedy that befell JDV's family drew sympathy from various leaders of the country who cast aside political and ideological lines to condole with them. These included President Macapagal-Arroyo, Vice President Noli de Castro and Senate President Franklin Drilon.

Senators Nene Pimentel, Loi and Jinggoy Estrada and Rep. Ronaldo Zamora, as well as NDF Chief Jose Ma. Sison and former MNLF Chief Nur Misuari. Rap also called his former rival. Messages of sympathy also poured from abroad—from Thai Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra and Thai Foreign Minister Surakiat (whom JDV openly endorsed in Beijing in the race for UN secretary general in 2006, foregoing his own ambition to run for that esteemed post); Cambodian Senate President Norodom Ranariddh; outgoing Indonesian Speaker Akbar Tanjung and incoming Speaker Agong Laksono; Chinese Speaker Wu Bangguo and Chinese Foreign Minister Li; Singapore PM Lee and his powerful wife, Madame Ho Ching; and Pakistani Speaker Chaudhry Amir Hussain.

On the other hand, the classmates of KC at Colegio San Agustin and International School gathered old photos of KC and put up an instant memorabilia at the Santuario de San Antonio, where they also sang at the Masses. Rep. Lorna Silverio and Lorna Laurel, wife of former Sen. Teroy Laurel, both came with old paintings of KC that they had bought at KC's one-girl painting exhibit eight years ago. KC's mom, Gina, is trying to buy some of those paintings back. This columnist found Gina yesterday morning sorting out some photos of KC that were salvaged from the fire.

Showing resiliency, JDV, during the wake, pointed out that what he was wearing that evening were all donations, as he lost everything in that fire. He said his shoes were from Rep. Roquito Ablan, his pants from Rep. Teddy Boy Locsin (who also donated many disposable briefs to JDV); his polo barong was retrieved from his old closet in his Pangasinan residence, while his son Joey Jr. donated pajamas. Hearing JDV's story, Samlakas Rep. JV Bautista quipped that the Speaker is the original recipient of relief goods from Congress. Pwede pa ba kaming magdonate (Can we give you more donations)? Bautista queried, and JDV replied, "Pag-binigyan mo ako ng briefs, tatanggapin ko (If those are briefs, I'll accept)."

The newspapers, read reports about the storm's aftermath and looked at the pictures that accompanied these stories. After so many tragedies and catastrophes in this country which have claimed thousands of lives, one would think he/she would get used to seeing death. But I guess that will only happen on the day one stops being human. So as I beheld these visions of people weeping over the loved ones they lost in the heavy rains, of kids shivering in the cold, their thin, wet garments plastered to their skinny bodies, and of homes wrecked and submerged in floodwaters, I shivered, felt scared and sorry for the grief that struck the nation.

But recently, as I went over the papers again, the pictures have changed. Yes, they are still grieving. They are still, homeless, cold and hungry. But one marked difference was that they were smiling. The snapshot captured the flicker of hope in their eyes as they stretched out their arms and reached for the bags of relief goods. (So even in black and white, I have to say the snapshot is a Kodak moment.)

Thinking about giving up those fancy Christmas parties, it dawned on me that it meant fewer gifts under the Christmas tree or simpler food on the table for Noche Buena. But then again it also meant sharing the feast and gifts with those who have nothing. Instead of just letting a small group share on that big pan of paella, I would like to believe that the whole country's poor community affected by the storm is now taking part in a grander salo-salo.

I would also like to think that when the storm blew away those red ribbons and tinsel, all it really took away were the distractions. Now stripped bare and naked, we see this Christmas celebrated for what it is really all about: sincere love.

tion, we decided to just hold a simple gathering at our conference room so we could give more of the budget as donations to families in storm-ravaged Quezon. Aside from that, the maximum amount for the exchange gifts was reduced from P300 to P200, with the P100 added instead to the donation fund.

The University of Santo Tomas followed. A few nights ago, when my sister came home, I could see disappointment written on her face. She told me there wouldn't be any fireworks for the "Paskuhan" this year. My sister and I have always loved this grand fireworks display which opens the university-wide Christmas celebration. Our necks would ache after looking up for 5 to 10 minutes, marveling at the bright colors decorating the dark, velvet sky.

But not even a flare was seen on "Paskuhan" night this Christmas season. The budget for fireworks this year was instead used to buy relief goods for victim families. Thinking of how much these fireworks cost these days, I'd say a lot of families really benefited from this donation.

This Christmas has been stripped of its red ribbons, candy canes, decorative angels, silver bells and other things that generally give a festive atmosphere to the season. I guess the strong winds blew them all away or the flood currents caused by the four typhoons carried them away along with the rusty roofs of humble homes.

For the past few weeks, I have leafed through "NOVEDADES con gran paella" kept ringing in my ear for the last couple of days. As early as November, our Spanish professor at Instituto Cervantes had been telling our class about the school's Christmas celebration on Dec. 4. He invited us all to attend. And his big come-on was the great pan of paella which everyone could eat during a salo-salo before the school closed for the holiday season.

Dec. 4, however, came and no paella was cooked. There wasn't much celebration either. Except for the lovely Christmas tree by the stairs and the Nativity figurines standing meekly next to it, telling me "it's Christmas!" the day still went by without that certain Christmassy feeling. Classes went on as usual, uninterrupted. Many students I guess, were surprised when they found out that the activity had been cancelled. I overheard one girl in the corridor saying that she had looked forward to the festivity and had even invited her friends over to eat and when they got there and found nothing, she had to usher them out again.

My professor said that the administration had decided to use the money for the great paella to help the victims of the recent catastrophe instead.

It was the first of a number of Christmas parties marked in my calendar to be cancelled.

The following week, I received news that Christmas parties of NGOs and other institutions at the Social Development Complex in Ateneo had also been cancelled or, if not, made simpler by using a portion of their party budget to give donations to the families in Quezon, Nueva Ecija and Montaban.

Our organization joined this act of solidarity. Instead of going to Corregidor for our combined Christmas party and 20th anniversary celebra-

Presidential Medal of Merit

WHAT is the Presidential Medal of Merit? It is one of the national honors awarded in the form of orders and decorations by the Philippine President, Congress or government. These orders and decorations are: the Quezon Service Cross, conferred by the President of the Philippines with the authorization of Congress; the Order of Lakandula, for political and civic merit; the Order of Sikatuna, for diplomatic merit; the Philippine Legion of Honor, for military and defense merit, as well as political and civic merit not requiring congressional authorization; the Order of Gabriela Silang, for the spouses of heads of state; and the Order of National Artists, the Order of National Scientists, and the Order of National Social Scientists, for those who have been proclaimed as such; the Gawad sa Manlilikha ng Bayan for those honored as national living treasures by the National Commission for Culture and the Arts (The awards for National Artists, Scientists, and Social Scientists and Manlilikha ng Bayan are of equal rank and prestige); the Gawad Mabini for Filipino diplomats; the Order of the Golden Heart, for those who have helped improve the life of the masses; and the Presidential Medal of Merit.

The criteria and various details concerning these national orders and decorations are incorporated in Executive Order No. 236, the Honors Code of the Philippines, signed Sept. 19, 2003. The implementing rules and regulations for the Honors Code are contained in Memorandum Order No. 128, which was signed Dec. 23, 2003. An administrative order mandates the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas as the official manufacturer of orders and decorations. The NCCA, the National Historical Institute, the Cultural Center of the Philippines, the Department of Foreign Affairs, the Department of National Defense, the Department of the Interior and Local Government, the Department of Science and Technology, the Armed Forces of the Philippines, the Philippine National Police, and the Philippine Coast Guard were all involved in the drafting of the EO.

Section 5, subsection VII of the Honors Code

THE LONG VIEW

Manuel L. Quezon III

describes the criteria for the Presidential Medal of Merit (also referred to as Pampanguluhan Medalya ng Merito) as follows:

"The Presidential Merit Award is hereby renamed the Presidential Medal of Merit.

"The Presidential Medal of Merit shall be conferred upon an individual, Filipino or foreign:

"a. for outstanding service to the President, the Administration or Cabinet members;

"b. for gaining prestige for the country in an international event, in the fields of literature, the sciences, the arts, entertainment, and other civilian fields of endeavor that foster national pride and artistic excellence;

"c. who is a retiring cultural worker or artist, after serving the government in an official or advisory capacity, or a foreign artist who has promoted Philippine culture; or

"d. for acts of merit that enhance the prestige of the Republic of the Philippines, including heading the Philippine delegation or having contributed materially to the success of a major international conference or event that has brought prestige and honor to the country, including Presidential visits overseas and major international events held in the Philippines."

The Presidential Medal of Merit was known as such until after martial law, when a general decline in the knowledge of international protocol and standards governing state awards led to the adoption of the catch-all term "award" to refer in general to presidential or state honors. The Presidential Medal of Merit is actually one of the oldest recognitions of our Republic, dating to the years immediately after independence in 1946.

Originally, the Presidential Medal of Merit was conferred on or near Independence Day, which used to be July 4. Civic groups were deputized to select people for recognition, and the President of the Philippines would then confer the medal in a ceremony in the Palace. At times, the award was given to entire groups, such as the Code Commission (appointed by President Roxas to modernize the Civil Code of the Philippines, it finished its work during the Quirino presidency), or families worthy of recognition for their excellence of character. Aside from the Code Commission (which had as one of its members, Arturo Tolentino), among the recipients of the Presidential Medal of Merit were the Court of Industrial Relations and Jose Brailio Sison's family (July 3, 1949 by President Quirino); and Florendo Tamesis and family (July 10, 1958 by President Garcia). Presidents also conferred the medal on their predecessors or former first ladies: President Quirino conferred it on Sergio Osmeña and Aurora Quezon (posthumously) on July 3, 1949; President Magsaysay conferred it on Presidents Elpidio Quirino and Emilio Aguinaldo on July 2, 1956.

While it's been extremely difficult to piece together the roster of Presidential Medal of Merit recipients (record-keeping in the government is in a mess, and apparently I'm the only one interested in putting such lists together), a survey on some (but not all) of the recipients of this medal gives an interesting combination of achievements and personalities. By Magsaysay: Juan Nakpil (architect), Lucresia Kastilag (musician); by Garcia: Jovita Fuentes (soprano), Severino Montano (playwright); by Marcos: Vicente Madrigal, "Flash" Florde (boxer), by Aquino: Lea Salonga, Cecile Licad; by Ramos: Haydee Yorac, Franklin Drilon; by Estrada: Victorino Rodriguez; by Arroyo: Manny Pacquiao, George Canseco, Zeneida Amador.

If you know of someone who has been conferred any of the state honors mentioned above, do let me know through www.quezon.ph

Reports on FPJ's death

FORMER PRESIDENTIAL candidate Fernando Poe Jr. has been in the news since he died of brain stroke last Dec. 14. Barring any other important news, he will be in the limelight until his burial on Dec. 22.

On the day he died, the INQUIRER reported the event with the headline "Da King" is dead." The subhead read "Fernando Poe Jr. united nation in prayer during two-day vigil for his recovery." Except for two unrelated stories, the newspaper's front page that day carried reports about the cause of his death and the vigil conducted by his fans.

A reader (whose identity I will keep under wraps for security reasons) did not like the way the INQUIRER announced Poe's death. He wrote: "All I can say with the way you wrote your stories about Poe is: OA, OVER ACTING, EXAGGERATED. You gave him too much publicity. You better go with him to... (expletive deleted)!"

I was taken aback by his e-mail. It was the first time that I came across this kind of reaction to a person's death. Respect for the dead, regardless of how he may have conducted his life, is ingrained in the Filipino culture. More so, if he is well regarded in his community.

I'm used to getting complaints about the newspaper's manner of reporting the death of prominent figures in the country. For political or personal reasons, the readers have contrasting views over the way the media announce the demise of those people.

Newsworthy

Last year, in the course of the INQUIRER's reporting on the death of actor Rico Yan, some readers complained about the treatment it gave that tragic event. While they believe Yan was a model of good behavior for the youth, they felt the coverage was made at the expense of other more important news reports.

But noticeably, no reader made a disparaging word about Yan's person. The complaints focused on the newspaper's manner of informing the public about his death, no reference at all was made to his character or whatever mistakes he might have committed when he was still alive.

In FPJ's case, it is inevitable for the newspaper to give him the kind of reporting it is doing now. Politics or bias for the late presidential candidate has nothing to do with it. Poe is a newsmaker, and a prime one at that. Aside from being a popular movie actor, he was a candidate who almost won the highest post of the land in the last presidential elections.

His high standing in the country is attested by the fact that President Macapagal-Arroyo continues to express her desire to pay her respects to him in person even if some of his relatives or political advisers are against that idea. There are even moves by some sectors to have the national flag placed at half-mast in government offices to honor him.

The newspaper will be remiss in its duty to inform the public about newsworthy events if it does a Ninoy Aquino-style coverage of Poe's death. In 1983, the Marcos-controlled print and broadcast media treated Ninoy's murder as a "non-event" despite the fact that millions of people were outraged by his assassination and notwithstanding the biggest crowd in the country's history to join a funeral cortege.

A broadsheet came up with a semblance of a news report by putting on its front page a photo of the crowd, but its headline was about the man who was struck by lightning during the funeral procession.

Biased reporting

The reader's complaint about the newspaper's reporting on Poe's death reminds me of the saying "you can't please everybody." There will always be somebody who will be unhappy about the way a news report is presented in terms of accuracy, objectivity or fairness.

During last May's elections, my mailbox was filled with letters protesting the INQUIRER's "pro-GMA" bias. Some readers felt the newspaper was subtly endorsing the candidacy of President Arroyo with the almost daily reports on her activities on the campaign trail.

Even the election advertisements that came out in the newspaper became the subject of complaints. Some candidates grumbled about the publication of "informers" about the accomplishments of government officers that prominently featured the President's face.

I told them there was nothing legally wrong with those advertisements. If they felt the ads violated the election laws, all they have to do is to secure an order from the Commission on Elections stopping further publication of those materials and the newspaper will promptly comply with it.

During the canvass of the presidential and vice-presidential votes in Congress, a member of Poe's PR staff sent me a blistering letter decrying the newspaper's refusal to print the stories about the opposition's own tally of election returns showing Poe's lead over Ms. Arroyo.

I explained to her that the editorial staff, not the newspaper management or anyone else, decides on what is fit for publication and what is not. The editors reported only on the count made by the National Movement for Free Elections in its capacity as the authorized citizen's arm of the Comelec.

Now, it looks like there has been a change in wind direction: the INQUIRER is being perceived as pro-FPJ because of the way it is reporting the goings-on in Poe's funeral.

Well, that's how the cookie crumbles in the newspaper industry, especially in this country. You simply can't win them all.

For commuters' sake

THIS letter is particularly intended for the Land Transportation Office and the Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board.

A couple of days ago, I took a jeepney at the Alabang Metropolis public transport terminal on my usual morning route to the Food Terminal Inc. in Taguig. Somewhere and sometime after we had exited from the Bicutan Interchange, along the north-bound lane of the South Service Road, the jeepney stopped. The driver apologetically asked all passengers to get off and to transfer to another vehicle, refunding each one of us the P5.50-fare we had earlier paid. The reason—we learned soon enough—was that LTO agents were posted near the FTI, checking passenger jeepneys for compliance with franchising and related regulations.

In that part of the road, we found it difficult to get a new ride as most other jeepneys had been similarly turning back for the same reason. The very few that proceeded to the FTI were fully loaded to accommodate us. And so, the road was suddenly awash with stranded commuters from all walks of life—students, employees, housewives, some with wares or kids—each one reflecting whether to walk the rest of the way, go back to Bicutan or Alabang, or wait for an elusive north-bound ride.

I fully appreciate the drive of the LTO and the LTRFB against erring public transport drivers and operators. But must they do this in such a way that they must inconvenience the riding public? Couldn't these agencies muster a bit of prudence to tell their respective agents to conduct the inspection not on the roadside (simply because this is no traffic matter) but right at the vehicle terminals?

There is surely no better place where violations of LTO and LTRFB regulations could be nipped in the bud!

Military probing death of Luisita peasant

THIS has reference to the article titled "A soldier shot me; Luisita peasant leader shot dead" (PDI, 12/10/04).

The Northern Luzon Command (Nolcom) under the leadership of Lt. Gen. Romeo B. Dominguez, strongly condemns the killing of Marcelino Beltran, a provincial leader of the Atyansang Magbubukid ng Tarlac and vice chair of the Anakpawis Party List by unidentified armed men in his home in Barangay San Sotero, Sta. Ignacia, Tarlac.

However, we are deeply saddened by the accusations pointing to the military as behind his murder, which have no basis other than the victim's supposed statement that a "soldier" (clad in "military uniform") shot him. There have been many instances in the past when NPA terrorists used military uniforms to pass themselves off as members of the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

Foul accusations of alleged human rights violations by Army soldiers have not only caused demoralization among our troops but also served as a platform upon which anti-military groups and individuals undermine the integrity and respectability of the AFP.

Dominguez has already directed 7th Infantry Division Commander Maj. Gen. Romeo Tolentino and 703rd Infantry Brigade Commander Pedro Curva to conduct a thorough investigation regarding the alleged involvement of an Army unit under the 7th Infantry Division and to fully cooperate in the investigation being conducted by the PNP Tarlac and NBI in the event they will conduct a separate probe on the incident.

Let it be known that the AFP is fully committed to uphold the human rights of every citizen, enemies of the state included. The full force of our law under the existing military justice system shall be imposed if anyone of our soldiers is found guilty of violating human rights.

The teaching of human rights principles is also part and parcel of the education and training curricula of all AFP learning institutions.

Sense of country

THE EXECUTIVE order issued by Manila Mayor Lito Atienza requiring all malls in Manila to play the national anthem at opening and closing time every business day (PDI, 12/1/04) has a noble objective. However, it is doubtful that it will succeed in inculcating nationalism among mall-goers in Manila or among Filipinos, for that matter.

Nationalism cannot be forced upon anybody by executive order or legislation. It comes naturally from the heart. It is an emotion or feeling that needs no inducement.

Another reason for pessimism is the fact that extreme personalism, the strongest weakness of the Filipino character, easily overpowers nationalism.

In 1987, the Senate created a task force to conduct an inquiry into the strengths and weaknesses of the Filipino character with a view to solving the social ills and strengthening the nation's moral fiber. The inquiry came up with a remarkable report that could have served as the basis for a moral recovery program. But nationalism was not listed in the report as among our strengths; in fact, extreme personalism was considered our foremost weakness.

I am not aware of the fate of that report. It must have gone the way of good intentions that never saw true flowering. Now, a commission for values formation has been created by the administration and Atienza has launched the "Kilusang Pilipinas Kong Mahal" that seeks to revive nationalist fervor in Filipinos. The theme of last year's national day celebration was "Bayan Ko, Sagot Ko." Its objective was basically similar to Atienza's. Regrettably, all these idealistic intentions have to contend with old habits that die hard.

I have observed that we cannot even wear our nationalism on our sleeves. Last week, I went to the mall to watch a movie. When the national anthem was played on the screen, the moviegoers could hardly stand erect. I could not believe that I was the only one mumbering the lyrics of our anthem with my right hand placed on my left breast.

This is in sharp contrast to the nationalism of the people of the countries where I had served as a diplomat. In Hungary, a former communist country, my wife and I made it a point to attend the Sunday Mass at the ornate Catholic church in downtown Budapest. The end of the Mass was always accentuated by the singing of the Hungarian national anthem titled "Himnusz," which has a religious tone. We were simply overwhelmed by the fervor with which the churchgoers sang the anthem.

I also admire the passion of the South Koreans, another people with a strong sense of nationalism, in singing their national anthem. I was envoy to Seoul from 1999 until my retirement from the foreign service last year and have seen how nationalism contributed to Korea's economic growth and dynamism.

Exposure to other countries and people makes us appreciate the importance of Filipino nationalism or lament the lack of it.

Prayer power

ON THE NIGHT of Dec. 2, the cellphone was used to pass on prayer requests and prayers for God's intervention as super typhoon Yoyong approached. Yoyong was spotted on satellite imagery to be larger than the Philippines, and much, much stronger than the last storm, Winnie which had wreaked havoc upon several provinces, causing untold misery to our already suffering brothers and sisters in the countryside.

Projected to make landfall that evening, Yoyong was also forecast to linger till the afternoon of the following day. Because of this, Yoyong brought so much fear and anxiety in our hearts.

In our helplessness, we turned to God. Because we believed, then as now, that super typhoon Yoyong would be no match to the power of prayer. For no matter how softly we whisper our prayer to God, if it is coming from the heart, He will listen. That night we asked Him for a miracle.

Instantly, texters and textmates became a "prayer army."

And God answered our prayers. That what we expected and prepared for did not come to pass proves once again that "with God nothing is impossible."

"The Lord has done great things for us, let us rejoice and be glad!" Let us be thankful unto God and bless His Name.

Best way to avoid HIV/AIDS

WE read with concern the article on "MTV Staying Alive Music Summit for HIV/AIDS," which was staged on Dec. 1 at the Bonifacio Global City Open Field with Frenzy Condoms, UNAIDS and Globe Genotex as sponsors. (PDI, 11/13/04)

MTV believes that generating awareness about the threats of HIV/AIDS will save the youth from harm. One of its sponsors, Frenzy Condoms, says, "The correct and consistent use of condoms is the most basic HIV prevention approach."

We believe events such as this mislead our youth into complacency about HIV/AIDS and what condoms can do. A document recently published by Lancet, a prestigious medical magazine and signed by experts from 36 countries, recognizes for the first time that abstinence and fidelity are key to stopping the spread of AIDS. Uganda President Yoweri Museveni, representative of the World Bank and of the Global Fund for Malaria, Tuberculosis and AIDS, and officials from five UN agencies are among the signatories of the statement.

The experts say that HIV/AIDS has become a health and humanitarian crisis that requires urgent intervention. They also say that the use of condoms is not enough to stop the spread of AIDS, and that abstinence should be promoted among young people who have not yet engaged in sexual activity, emphasizing that avoiding risks is the best way to prevent AIDS and many other sexually transmitted infections, as well as unwanted pregnancies.

If sexual activity has already occurred, they say, individuals should still be encouraged to return to abstinence or mutual fidelity with one person as the best way to avoid infection.

The experts insist that condoms are not 100 percent safe. "Young people and adults should know that condoms reduce the risk of infection from 80-90 percent when they are used consistently," they say. This means that even when used each time there is sexual contact, condoms do not guarantee against HIV/AIDS and other diseases.

The experts also reminded parents of their responsibility to pass on the proper values on sexual behavior to their children.

Parents storm pre-need educational plan office

DAVAO CITY—Agitated by the seeming breakdown of "assurance" from the College Assurance Plan (CAP), parents of scholars of the pre-need educational plan stormed its regional office here Friday to demand explanation and even payment.

This came following the receipt of a letter from San Pedro College (SPC) management, a premier Catholic-run private school here, asking the parents to settle their accounts for the second semester of the school year, which was supposed to have been shouldered by their CAP insurance.

The Ateneo de Davao University and the Davao Doctors College also earlier refused to accept CAP checks, and required their students with CAP scholarship to pay instead.

The problem was resolved with the students taking the responsibility of paying, with the assurance that CAP will refund their payment.

But the INQUIRER learned that some students have not been reimbursed the money due them.

In the letter, signed by SPC president Sr. Aida Frencillo, parents of CAP scholars were required to pay their accounts pending availability of CAP funds in order not to jeopardize the operation of the school.

Apparently, CAP-Philippines failed to pay for the enrolment, even the down payments, of their scholars enrolled in SPC.

The letter also indicated that the insurance company also failed to "fulfill its promise to pay the accounts of CAP scholars for the first semester of school year 2004-2005."

Frencillo also said that all checks issued by CAP-Philippines for the first semester accounts of CAP scholars bounced twice due to insufficiency of funds.

Frencillo said they were left with no choice but to ask the CAP scholars themselves to pay for their school accounts by January next year. The back accounts will be collected in three equal installments from January to March 2005.

"Our pending account is around P15,000 to P17,000 for the preliminary exams... and we are being asked to pay it by January. CAP should settle this immediately or we suffer the difficulty of paying it," a parent said.

"We are also afraid that this could affect the education of our children," another parent said.

But CAP, through its account manager Neneng Remorosa, account manager, said the company have available funds to pay for the pending accounts of their scholars.

She said they were still waiting for their share from the P110-million funds to be released by the CAP head office in Manila.

The P110 million is intended for all the CAP scholars nationwide but the money will not be released in full. She said the CAP national office would release the money in P25-million scheme.

The INQUIRER also learned that the CAP regional office here has a pending account of P35 million for all its scholars in this region alone.

Remorosa said CAP would implement a 'first come, first serve' scheme for the payment.

DAR orders power firm to stop developing orchard farm in Aklan

By Recto I. Vidal
PDI Visayas Bureau

KALIBO, Aklan—The Department of Agrarian Reform provincial office has ordered Mirant Power Corp. to stop developing the 2.8 hectare orchard farm as a site of their diesel-fed 5-megawatt power plant in Barangay Mabilo, New Washington town.

The cease and desist order (CDO) was issued on Dec. 16 and was signed by lawyer Daniel Martelino, Provincial Agrarian Reform Officer II.

Martelino told Mirant and its subsidiary Toledo Holdings to stop developing the area within ten days from the receipt of the CDO.

He warned that failure to comply with the order would compel the DAR to file criminal charges against the respondents for violating Republic Act 6657 or the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Law on the "premature conversion" of agricultural lands into industrial estates.

It was learned that Mirant failed to file an application for conversion with the DAR office here since it constructed its power plant in June 2004 despite a previous CDO issued by the DAR.

One of the violations found by DAR during its investigation was a land transfer transaction between its former owner Chelma Reyes and the Toledo Holdings.

"We found said transfer of property questionable since it has been registered with the Registry of Deeds even without a clearance from DAR as mandated by the DAR administrative order no. 1 series of 1989. This is an administrative offense. In other words, it has not gone through the usual process," said lawyer Carol Morales, chief legal division of DAR-Aklan.

Documents showed that Reyes issued a special power of attorney in favor of lawyer Simonette Peranta who executed a deed of absolute sale to Toledo Holdings. The lawyer is a daughter of Mayor Edmund Peralta of New Washington.

Morales told the INQUIRER that the land transfer was registered at the Registry of Deeds on April 5 and was approved by Fiscal Lourdes Quampo Mayor under TCT no. 3431. A new land title was issued to Toledo Holding on the same day.

He said the second violation was the alleged "illegal construction" of the power plant, which was now about 80 percent completed, because it had no approval from the DAR.

He pointed out that Mirant also did not apply for conversion when it started building the power plant in the orchard farm.

The INQUIRER learned that as early as May 5, the DAR had asked Mirant to stop developing the area since it had not obtained any clearance from the DAR but the latter ignored it and continued to bring in heavy equipment like into the project site.

Adrian Moncado, assistant vice president of Mirant Global Corp., told Rejo that his concerns had well been noted and was assured that Mirant would comply with all the requirements for the application for conversion.

Allies in the Visayas mourn death of 'Da King'

CEBU CITY—Friends and political allies of Fernando Poe Jr. in the Visayas joined the nation in expressing grief and sorrow over his death, especially since his electoral protest has yet to be resolved.

Former Bohol Gov. Rene R. Lampagos said the death of Poe left hanging his quest for justice in his election protest case.

Lampagos, who was Poe's provincial standard-bearer in the last election, said Poe's protest was not only intended to prove that he won the election but more importantly to lead to the prosecution of those who make a mockery of the people's mandate.

"I pity him. He died a frustrated man," added Tagbilaran City Mayor Dan Lum.

Lum, who ran and won under the Partido ng Masang Pilipino of ex-President Joseph Estrada, said Poe came out of his comfort zone to offer himself in the service of the Filipino people but this failed to materialize when the votes were counted.

Negros Oriental Rep. Emilio Macias II, meanwhile, stressed it would still be premature to be thinking of politics, especially talking about Poe's supposed political successor.

He said he did not believe that Sen. Edgardo Angara was speaking for the LDP when the latter was quoted as saying that Poe's wife, actress Susan Roces, may be drafted to head the opposition.

Macias said the Nationalist People's Coalition, of which he is a member, has yet to meet to discuss the matter.

Shock

Other supporters of the actor were still in shock over his death.

"We have lost a leader and many of us are demoralized," said Boots Cadsawan, National President of the Filipinos for Peace, Justice and Progress Movement (FPJMP).

He said he does not see anyone among the opposition leaders who could match Poe's "sincerity to help and serve the people."

The group, which claims to have six million members, supported Poe's failed presidential bid in the May elections.

Cadsawan said Poe's supporters from nearby areas especially from Central Luzon and Southern Tagalog would come to the late action star's wake and burial set on Dec. 22.

He said the action star felt "bitter" with the slow pace of his electoral protest pending before the Presidential Electoral Tribunal (PET), which is constituted by the Supreme Court.

The FPJMP last month launched a signature campaign calling for the faster resolution of the protest. Cadsawan said they planned to gather one million signatures by late January or February next year.

They were now unsure whether to continue the campaign, said Cadsawan, saying they will discuss it after Poe's burial.

"Even if he has passed away, we all want to prove who really won the elections," said Cadsawan.

Poe, who lost to President Macapagal-Arroyo by 1.1 million votes in the official canvass, claimed the President cheated him in the May election.

Mayor Ricardo Presbitero of Valadolid, Negros Occidental said a great injustice had been done to a "deserving president" of the country. "It's time for the people to collectively pray for the restoration of the right democracy and to continue the legacy of FPJ," he said.

In Bacolod City, Gil Arisola, FPJ rival President Macapagal.

Daza described Poe as a man of "courage" who "brought happiness to the Filipino people, especially the masses through the films he starred, directed and produced."

"I am sad. Knowing him as a sincere person whose only intention was to serve the people. I can say that he is a great loss to our country," said former Cebu City Mayor Garcia, who ran and lost in his mayoral bid in the last elections under Poe's ticket.

Leandro Boy Lido Patalinghug, a radio and stage drama writer and director in Cebu who chaired the FPJ Para sa Lahat movement in Central Visayas in the last elections, urged their different leaders in the Visayas to sponsor a Mass in their respective places for the eternal repose of Poe's soul.

Good deeds

Bacolod Mayor Evelio Leonardia, another political ally of Poe, said Poe would always have a place in the hearts of the people whose lives he touched. "More than the hero-image he projected in the movies, his enumerable good deeds will be remembered even much longer. Testimonies from people who benefited from the goodness of his golden heart are too many to count, because Ronnie not only gave from what he had, he gave of himself."

To give tribute to a "sincere and great man," former Mayor Alvin Garcia, who ran for Cebu City mayor under Poe's Koalisyon ng Nagkakaisang Pilipino (KNP), initiated the celebration of a Mass at 6 p.m. tonight at the Cebu Metropolitan Cathedral.

Garcia said he had contacted Poe's supporters and fans of the actor to attend the Mass. "It is just a small but fitting tribute to a great person," he told the Inquirer.

The FPJ Para sa Lahat already offered a Mass last Thursday at the Capitol Parish Church in Cebu City, said Leandro "Boy" Patalinghug, the group's coordinator in Central Visayas.

Patalinghug said that after the Mass which was attended by about 100 persons, they launched the signing of a manifesto, expressing their support and sympathy to the bereaved family.

He added the manifesto was initiated by Pio Tuadles, cousin of KNP defeated gubernatorial candidate Fred Tuadles. Chito Fuentes, Alex Pal, Joey Gabieta, Nestor Burgos Jr., Jhunnex Napallacan and Carla Gomez, PDI Visayas Bureau

POE

Movement Bacolod chair, asked the supporters and fans of Poe to accept his death with open minds and hearts. "I personally believe that it is better that he is now with the Lord than to have survived and remain comatose," he said.

"I appeal for continuous prayers for FPJ and his family to remain strong to accept the will of God," Arisola said.

"Let us also not attach politics to the death of FPJ like attacking President Arroyo. It is not good. They should not put political color into the death of FPJ but accept the will of God," he said.

"The atmosphere in the entire province is so gloomy and sad," said Northern Samar Gov. Raul Daza, the Kilusan ng Nagkakaisang Pilipino (KNP) in Eastern Visayas.

Group wants end to Igorot begging

By Vincent Cabrera
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

BAGUIO CITY—"Ma-id" is a convenient word to know during the holidays, when elderly beggars from the Mountain Province flock to cities like Baguio and Metro Manila.

Lyn Madalang, executive director of gender rights advocate group Ebgan Inc., supplied tourists in Baguio this Bontoc word, meaning "nothing," but it's also handy for Metro Manila folk who are often approached by Cordilleran beggars seeking a coin or two "in the spirit of Christmas."

It's likely the same Cordillerans will be rounded up again by social workers before Christmas, but not before they have managed to earn enough to live on for a month, said Madalang.

"And it has to stop," she said. The Department of Social Welfare and Development has about given up on indigenous Filipinos who visit Metro Manila to beg, when everyone is expected to be generous.

Last year, the DSWD returned 32 beggars to the Cordillera. The number was a big increase from the six Mt. Province elders who are known to frequent Metro Manila during the holidays, said Mandy Ramos, officer in charge of the DSWD Cordillera Crisis Intervention Unit.

The Metropolitan Manila Development Authority detained these six old women in 2002, she said. "It was so traumatic for them, but it didn't stop (the wave of beggars from the Cordillera)," Ramos said.

The DSWD in Metro Manila has also struggled to contain Badjao and Aeta beggars, because they come in clans during the tourist season.

But the increase in the number of Cordilleran beggars is unusual considering that Bontoc and Sagada villages in Mt. Province have strict rules against begging, said Madalang.

"A hungry family in Mt. Province will never beg for food from a neighbor. It's not how we are raised," she said.

Worse, the phenomenon involves elderly women, the very people who are expected to enshrine the community's history and protect their rituals, she said.

"Bontoc have engaged other (Cordillera) tribes in arguments about begging. An Ifugao once challenged (my friend) Ben Longid that Bontoc beggars have shamed the whole Igorot community, and (Longid) kept protesting that Bontoc (of Mt. Province) wouldn't do that," Madalang said.

Both government and academic surveys, however, confirm this accusation, she said.

Ramos said much of their data have not been validated because beggars they interview "tend to mislead us."

But the Mt. Province villages government was referred to are the same villages tracked down by Jeanette Palanghiao-Scott, for an independent women's development study at the University of the Philippines.

DSWD is monitoring the villages of Mainit, Dait, Dalican, and Mailbog in Bontoc town, and the villages of Fideisan, Tanulong, Ducus and Teptepan in Sagada town.

Madalang said some of these villagers are themselves discriminated by fellow Mt. Province folk.

"They are the backward of the backward (villages). There are no roads, there is no government presence," she said.

"In fact, I suspect that others have ventured into begging using the names of these communities because people already gave them that reputation," she added.

Madalang said residents in cities, where these beggars find themselves in during Christmas, have already formed tales about how rich and powerful these Cordillera women really are.

Many of the beggars profiled, by Scott's and Ramos' studies appear to have "families in Baguio, and are well-off because they have houses, they are well fed and have professionals for sons and daughters."

"When Scott traced three of her respondents back to their home villages, she validated the (tales). They had houses. They merely found a lucrative way of earning when the planting season was over," Madalang said.

"One consistently told story in Mt. Province involves the first beggar who accidentally fell into this new trade when she lost her money in a big city and imitated the town's beggars. She discovered that every time she stretched out her palm, people would give, and she shared this detail with her friends back home," she said.

Madalang said Mt. Province villagers stopped short of ostracizing these beggars, mainly because their own families tolerate the practice.

"The sons and daughters make a big show about condemning the practice but they share in the rice and products the elderly bring home from begging in Metro Manila," she said.

Ramos said DSWD had tried to address this phenomenon by undertaking a community shame campaign.

"We even posted signs warning people not to give to the beggars, but the human rights sector felt that it (violated) their rights," she said.

The government's response to indigenous Filipino beggars is short-term because it fails to detect the cultural deterioration involved in the problem, she added.

"Old Igorot women are never expected to forget their cultural values, but we have Igorot carolers now who play gongs in violation of old ritual practices. They try to circumvent that by playing tin cans instead of authentic gongs, but they still wear traditional g-strings to attract attention," she said.

Cebu bishop stops holding pre-dawn Mass

CEBU CITY—For the first time in 18 years, Cebu Archbishop Ricardo Cardinal will not be officiating his traditional Misa de Gallo or pre-Christmas dawn Masses in the various parishes in the province.

Mgr. Achilles Dakay, the media liaison officer of the Cebu Archdiocese, said the prelate was advised by his doctor to take a rest so that he could fully recover from the angioplasty surgery that he went through recently in Manila.

Cardinal Vidal had been officiating Misa de Gallo in different parishes for each day of the dawn Masses held nine days prior to the Christmas eve Mass.

The prelate had usually been holding the Misa de Gallo in parishes outside of Metro Cebu—traveling from one town to the next for nine days.

Dakay said Vidal had been doing this since 1986, a year after he became a cardinal in 1985.

As to parishes who wanted to have the prelate officiate their dawn Mass, Dakay said they would send one of the archdiocese's three other bishops—Bishop Julio Cortes of Sto. Rosario Parish in Cebu City, Bishop Emilo Borac of Carcar and Bishop Vicente Manuel of Casuntingan, Mandaue City.

Dakay said Vidal would still be observing the dawn Masses at the archbishop residence here.

Vidal flew to Manila on Nov. 25 to undergo angioplasty, a procedure that unclogs the heart's arteries.

Dakay said the operation was conducted last Saturday at the Chinese General Hospital, and it was very successful. Jhunrex Napollacan, PDI Visayas Bureau

CITY OF CALAPAN—More than 1,450 packs of assorted goods were distributed to victims of Typhoon "Unding" among the Mangyans in Bait, Panaytayan in Mansalay and residents in Barangays Mabuhay, Uyao and Camatigue in Roxas town, all of Oriental Mindoro on Sunday. The goods were collected from the 4-day telethon called Oplan Sagip Bayan, Sagip Panlalawigan on TVNet immediately after the calamity that left thousands homeless. The program was coordinated by the provincial government and cause-oriented groups and individuals.

CLOSE to 40,000 families in typhoon-ravaged areas of Quezon, Aurora, Nueva Ecija and the Camarines provinces have benefited from the disaster response that San Miguel Corp. (SMC) immediately launched following the government's call for relief assistance in areas ravaged by several typhoons recently, according to a news release. Less than 24 hours after Yoyong made a landfall in Aurora, SMC mobilized its resources to distribute about 25,000 boxes of four- and six-liter of distilled water and 4,300 boxes of corned beef in pouches and in cans. "We were moved by reports from our field personnel that many of the typhoon victims have not eaten for days and sorely lack potable drinking water," said Camille Buenaventura, SMC Social Development manager. The relief goods were sent through ABS-CBN, GMA 7 and ABC-5.

COTABATO CITY—Forest rangers and the military seized suspected illegally cut logs during a joint operation on Dec. 14 in a remote village in Matanog, Maguindanao, officials said. The logs, numbering about 2,122, were abandoned near the boundary of Maguindanao and Lanao del Sur, according to Hadji Kahal Kedtag, Maguindanao's first district community environment and natural resources officer (Centro). No one was arrested in the early morning raid, which Kedtag and Col. Feliciano Hernandez of the 64th Infantry Battalion, led. Kedtag said this was his office's biggest apprehension in the region, "since the ARMM (Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao) came into existence in 1989."

LUCENA CITY—Be prepared for flash floods and landslides, a Pampanga-based non-government organization and veteran of lahar-disaster management advised local government officials in calamity-stricken Quezon towns.

Eugene Orejas, executive director of the Central Luzon Center for Emergency Aid and Rehabilitation (Concern), called on government officials of Real, Infanta and General Nakar to establish flash floods and watch points in the upstream of the rivers.

Orejas said the monitoring posts should be equipped with communications facilities with enough warning systems to prevent the loss of lives should there be a repeat of similar tragedies that struck the areas more than two weeks ago.

Orejas and his group formed "Oplan Sagip Bayan" that stayed in north Quezon last week and distributed relief goods among Dumagat natives.

He said they were in Infanta on Friday when panic swept the town from rumors of overflowing Agus River.

"You just can't leave the residents to fend for themselves every time calamity strikes," he said over the phone.

His group formed grassroots-based disaster response organizations among the Dumagats that would draft a disaster preparedness plan, he said.

"The local governments should formulate a similar plan for the entire locality especially along the areas that are prone to disasters," Orejas said.

The Mt. Pinatubo explosion in 1991 left lessons from which Central Luzon residents and local government officials could build on to save lives and properties, he said.

"Like lahar, landslides are triggered by strong rains."

Both landslides and flash floods could recur in an area with the denuded condition of Sierra Madre, he said. "There is no reason to be complacent."

He added: "The Mt. Pinatubo experience showed that no or fewer lives would be wasted or maimed when people are prepared. The same experience also showed that risks are greatly reduced when people get the correct information in time to get out of harm's way."

Their experience also showed that the vulnerability of the people are greatly reduced if local government officials exercise leadership in disaster management and mitigation.

"Like in Mt. Pinatubo, the Oplan Sagip Bayan strongly urged local officials in northern Quezon to identify the villages that are high risk to floods and landslides and relocate the residents.

As the relocation is being done, Orejas said the rehabilitation of farms and fishing grounds should also start to help calamity victims cope fast with the disaster. "Making the victims rely on relief goods for a long time will only create a sense of dependence," he said.

And because rehabilitation work entails so much resources that are beyond the local government's capacity, Orejas advised that it would be wise for the national government to direct rehabilitation funds to local government units, and non-government and people's organizations.

"The local government unit in turn should maximize resources and not allow any form of corruption of precious public funds," Orejas said. Delfin Mallari Jr., PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

2 suspects in killing of Dolphy grandson arrested

By Edson C. Tandoc Jr.

POLICE have arrested two suspects in the killing of Jelom Carlo Quizon, grandson of comedy king Dolphy.

The suspects: Jerome Flores, 23, and Alger Magdaraog, 21, however, denied allegations that they were among five young men who shot Quizon Saturday.

Quizon, 14, died of a gunshot wound in the abdomen after assailants on a tricycle opened fire at him and his two friends in Barangay La Loma at about 5:30 a.m.

His two friends were wounded in the incident but have been reportedly declared out of danger.

Members of the Central Police District (CPD) Station 1 in La Loma arrested Flores Saturday afternoon in Caloocan City after a witness tagged him as among the suspects.

Police later arrested Magdaraog when the latter went to the police station to visit Flores.

CPD Director Nicasio Radovan told the INQUIRER that a witness positively identified the two as among the five suspects who attacked Quizon's group.

Flores and Magdaraog admitted that they were members of the True Brown Style group, a self-styled street gang in La Loma and Caloocan City.

Quizon, the two said, was a member of their rival group Temple Street Trece.

However, they denied they were among those who shot Quizon.

Flores said he was at home sleeping at the time of the attack because he was drunk the night before.

Magdaraog said he did not know Quizon personally.

A day after the killing of Quizon, another teenager was slain in a gang war in Manila.

Randel Tanjeco of Batangas Line, San Andres Bukid, Manila, was shot after his gang clashed with a rival group on Pedro Gil Street in Paco at 5:50 a.m.

Police said the two groups were first reported to have engaged in a stone-throwing incident before someone fired a homemade shotgun.

Tanjeco was hit with three pellets in the chest and arm.

Both gangs had just attended Dawn Mass at the Paco Catholic Church. With Tarra Quismundo

Filmfest to go on despite Poe death

By Margaux C. Ortiz

THE SHOW must go on.

Despite the recent death of actor Fernando Poe Jr., Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) Chair Bayani Fernando said there was no reason for it to affect the holding of the Metro Manila Film Festival (MMFF) this year.

"We are even looking for a higher income this year," Fernando, also the MMFF chair, said in a phone interview.

He declared, "The movies are improving in terms of quality and entertainment."

Fernando stressed that since he became MMDA and MMFF chair three years ago, the film festival's income had been improving.

"The festival earned P350 million last year and we are looking at earning half a billion this year," the MMDA chair said.

Fernando said the MMFF Parade of Stars would be held as scheduled on Dec. 24, with the festival's eight floats passing through White Plains via Edsa, Aranceta Center in Cubao, Quezon Avenue, Magsaysay Boulevard, Nagtahan, Pres. Quirino Avenue, Roxas Boulevard, to Aliw Theater at the Cultural Center of the Philippines Complex.

The MMDA-Traffic Operations Center will deploy 162 traffic personnel, including 26 motorcycle escorts.

The MMDA-Traffic Enforcement Group and the National Capital Region Police Office, on the other hand, will deploy 240 traffic officers for crowd control.

Poe, known as the King of Philippine Movies, had been a key figure in past MMFFs with his movies, especially that of the "Ang Panday" series.

Drug laboratory suspect escapes

By Christian V. Esguerra

THE PHILIPPINE Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA) is on the spot, again.

After it was blamed for the dismissal of charges against two Chinese men caught allegedly operating an illegal drugs laboratory inside the Multinational Village in Parañaque City last year, the PDEA has lost another suspect in a similar raid last November.

Li Zhong Hong, alias James Milan, who was arrested last month in another alleged drug laboratory in Multinational Village, escaped from his detention cell at the ground floor of the PDEA

Metro Manila Regional Office in Quezon City.

A PDEA report said Li escaped by destroying the grill cover of the exhaust fan in his cell.

But PDEA chief Anselmo Avenida Jr. himself said yesterday that he found the report incredible.

"It's a very mysterious escape," he said in a radio interview. "It's very likely that someone from the PDEA helped him escape through the gate."

Avenida said he was so angry over the escape that he kept PO1 Frederick Placido, the lone guard watching the PDEA cell that time, in the cell where Li had stayed

He also placed under technical arrest Chief Insp. Dante Garadan, officer in charge of the PDEA custodial group, and PO2 Rolando Duazo, the other guard who was supposed to be on duty during the escape.

Li was no ordinary detainee.

Suspected of working for a big-time drug ring, he was arrested at the alleged shabu laboratory on Nazareth Street, Multinational Village, last month.

The house yielded a huge volume of chemicals used in manufacturing high-grade shabu. Some of the ingredients were subsequently destroyed by a fire that mysteriously gutted the storehouse where they had been placed for safekeeping.

PO3 Reynaldo Arojado discovered that Li was missing at 5:45 p.m.

An ocular inspection of Li's detention cell showed that the horizontal steel bar covering a small exhaust fan had been sawed off.

But assuming that Li could possibly fit his 5-foot-6 frame at the small opening, the route would have been "hazardous," Avenida said in a statement.

"If the escapee used this, he could (have been) seriously injured because he would be jumping a height equivalent to three stories."

Filipino invention goes global

DISTRIBUTORS from six nations have taken interest in a Filipino gas saving device and have signed contracts to sell the gadget in their respective countries.

Representatives from Gasgadget SL (Spain), PT Era Setia Abadi (Indonesia), Carnot Air Conditioning and Refrigeration (Marianas Islands), Harish J. Jadwani (India), NIAF AL RAJHI EST FOR TRADING (Saudi Arabia), and VL Khaos (Oceania) Pty. Ltd. (Australia) recently signed a contract for the sale of the Khaos Super Turbocharger in their countries.

The contract signing was held at the Inventionhaus International Corporation (IIC) Head Office at the President's Tower, Timog Avenue, Quezon City. IIC manufactures the gas-saving device invented by jeepney driver-turned-inventor Pablo Planas.

In a statement, Isko Catibayan, ICC vice president for sales, said that with the setting up of six installation sites and 78 dealerships covering the whole Philippines, the company was now focused on expanding internationally.

Khaos is an instrument attached to a gasoline engine. Its makers say the gadget facilitates gas savings by controlling the mixture of air and fuel, resulting in optimal efficiency.

Tests conducted by the Department of Science and Technology, the Department of Energy and the Department of Environment and Natural Resources showed savings of 15 to 50 percent of gasoline consumption for car engines with Khaos.

Also, harmful emissions were greatly lessened after the gadget was installed in the test engines.

Catibayan has disclosed that they were currently working on a device for diesel engines.

3-years-old and fighting leukemia

By Jerry Esplanada

THIS Christmas, Ma. Carmela Hombrebueno, a single parent from Taguig, is hoping for a miracle for Miguel Angelo, the youngest of her four children.

"Migui," who is only 3 years old, is afflicted with JMML, a rare form of leukemia.

The young boy has only nine to 12 months to live—"even earlier if he fails to undergo a much-needed bone marrow transplant," his attending physician at the Medical City hospital in Pasig City had told his mom.

Cure for JMML, short for juvenile myelomonocytic leukemia, is not common, according to the White Plains, New York-based Leukemia and Lymphoma Society or LLS.

The disease has been "resistant to chemotherapy. Improvement in survival occurs after a stem cell transplantation from a compatible sibling.

"The median survival of patients with JMML is usually less than two years," said an LLS fact sheet obtained by Hombrebueno.

Despite the scant reasons for hope, Hombrebueno is not giving up.

"A miracle is always possible. I've been praying for one since Migui was hospitalized Nov. 24," said the executive secretary of the construction firm First Balfour.

Hombrebueno has learned from Dr. Vincent Aba, Migui's pediatrician, that "getting a compatible donor (for the bone marrow transplant) isn't easy."

"The transplant (preferably from a sibling) was the suggested treatment. It's not the cure, but it could prolong my son's life," she said.

Migui has a sister, Mica, who is 15, and two older brothers, Ian and Hans, who are 12 and 10.

"But it's not a sure thing. If we fail to get a match, we'll have to seek the help of St. Luke's Medical Center, which normally does out-of-country search for bone marrow donors," said Hombrebueno.

Here, only St. Luke's and the Asian hospital, both in Metro Manila, conduct bone marrow transplants.

When interviewed, Hombrebueno confided that Migui's treatment had depleted her savings.

Chemotherapy drugs cost P10,000 to P15,000 per treatment. Migui has just started his first chemotherapy session which lasts for five days. The next session follows after 28 days.

Soon, the Hombrebuenos will need to spend at least P45,000 per session of the more "aggressive" chemo treatments.

According to the LLS fact sheet furnished to the INQUIRER, "infants with JMML fail to thrive."

"Enlargement of the liver may occur while enlargement of the spleen occurs in virtually every case," it said.

Both Migui's liver and spleen are already infected, his mother disclosed as she also showed the kid's bloated belly.

JMML "represents about 1.5 percent of childhood leukemias. It occurs most often in infants and children under 4 years of age."

"The blood cell and bone marrow findings are similar in some respects to adult chronic myelomonocytic leukemia. Both disorders are cancers that originate in a marrow cell that normally functions to form blood cells."

Migui was in a bad mood during our recent visit. Apparently irritated and in pain, he kept on tossing and turning in his hospital bed.

But to everybody's surprise, the kid soon relaxed, cuddled his toy "Santa bear" and gamely posed for several shots taken by INQUIRER photographer Joseph Agcaoili.

"We hope he'd be able to beat the tough odds and Migui's remarkable recovery begins real soon. Let's all hope and pray for a miracle," Hombrebueno told us while we were about to leave the boy's room.

Choosy cabbies? Here are tips from the Manila police

By Leila B. Salaverria

WITH most people storming malls and commercial centers this Christmas, the demand for taxis will certainly be high.

However, as in the experience of many cab-riders in recent years, some taxi drivers may take to choosing their passengers.

Some may even refuse to convey commuters to places which they perceived to be choked in traffic.

And when these cabbies do agree to drive passengers to "impossible" places, some drivers may do it in exchange for an illegally charged fee.

Sen. Manny Villar, chair of the Senate committee on public order, said these practices should be stopped.

The senator explained that these practices defeat the purpose of the existence of taxis, which is to provide quick, available and convenient means of transportation.

But commuters need not be victimized by such drivers.

"They can ask the police for help against abusive drivers and there are complaints they can file," said Supt. Arturo Paglinawan, General Assignment Section chief of the Western Police District.

Paglinawan said that when a taxi driver rejected a passenger on unreasonable grounds, the passenger could call the attention of any nearby policeman or traffic enforcer and ask him to accost the driver or to issue him a traffic violation ticket.

If no policeman is nearby, the passenger can take down the taxi's name and plate number and go to the police.

"The passenger can file a complaint of refusing to convey a passenger against the driver. That is a crime," he said.

Paglinawan said the practice of not using the meter and asking for a specific fare, known as "pagkokontra," could also be used as a basis for a complaint because it would be tantamount to refusing to convey a passenger.

He added that though the corresponding penalty for such an offense was light, at least it would teach the driver a lesson.

Paglinawan said the police could forward the said complaint to the Land Transportation Office, which would, in turn, impose administrative sanctions like the suspension of the driver's license.

But, he said the passenger must be willing to file and pursue the complaint so that the erring driver would change his ways.

Globe Kababayan takes London by storm.

Amsterdam OFWs took time out from their busy schedules to enjoy the Kumustahan Concert.

For the approximately eight million Filipinos living and working abroad, coping with homesickness is a daily struggle. Especially during the Christmas season, which is traditionally a time for family and friends to get together. And for many of these OFWs, the best way to keep the loneliness at bay is to stay connected to all things Filipino, by keeping in touch with loved ones, remaining up-to-date with the country's current issues and events, and listening to music or watching shows that bring them closer to home.

Globe Kababayan, the OFW mobile services arm of innovations leader Globe Handyphone, recently treated Europe-based OFWs to an evening of distinctly Filipino harmonies and humor with the Kumustahan Concert Series 2004 organized by Star Events, Inc. Touring four (4) major European cities — namely Amsterdam, Netherlands; Rome, Italy; Vienna, Austria, and London, UK — the Kumustahan Concert Series gave the diplomatic corps and the OFW community a chance to take a break from their busy work schedules and get together to reminisce fondly about the Philippines and the people they left behind.

Talents from each country's local OFW community graciously opened the show, which was hosted by Hanap Buhay Overseas anchor Angelique Lazo. Veteran comedian Nanette Inventor brought the house down with Tita Munding, her personal take on the OFW lifestyle. Meanwhile, singing siren Geneva Cruz thrilled the crowd with her sexy voice and sultry dance moves, and further excited the audience when she asked veejay KC Montero to join her onstage for a special number. Finally, the well-loved trio of Jim Paredes, Danny Javier, and Buboy Garrovillo — more popularly known as the APO Hiking Society — alternately tugged at the audience's heartstrings with their repertoire of songs that evoke nostalgia and patriotism and tickled their funnybones with their kooky antics.

However, the show brought more than just entertainment to the homesick crowd. A significant segment of the Kumustahan concert was devoted to introducing the Globe Kababayan products and services available in European countries. OFWs have the option of reloading their loved ones' phones with traditional Globe Call and Text cards or through the enhanced AutoloadMAX service, which allows senders to create personalized messages to accompany each reload. These products and services, along with the award-winning Share-a-Load service, are also available in countries like Hong Kong, Singapore, Japan and other OFW territories.

But the service that received the most enthusiastic response from the OFW community was the newly-launched Globe G-Cash, the mobile currency that can be transferred from one Globe or Touch Mobile phone to another to make purchases, payments or remittances. The audience was delighted to find out that they could send G-Cash to their loved ones through Globe's remittance partners in Europe. Capping the night's revels was a raffle of Globe Prepaid phone kits to lucky audience members who could show a text message from their Globe Handyphone or Touch Mobile family members or friends. These prepaid phone kits would be delivered by Globe as Christmas gifts to the winners' designated recipients in the Philippines.

All in all, the Kumustahan Concert Series was a success — in providing distinctly Filipino entertainment for homesick OFWs and promoting the connectivity fostered by Globe Kababayan's suite of products and services tailor-fit to the unique needs of the global Filipino.

Proudly Filipino entertainers topbilled the Kumustahan Concert Series.

Seen enjoying the show were Philippine Ambassador to Austria Victor Garcia, Jr. and wife Connie.

Geneva Cruz's sultry voice soothes OFWs in Europe.

In the Realtors' stunning 104-102 win over the Phone Pals in the first round, Aquino exploded for 29 points, including a shifty move in the paint just seconds before halftime that humbled De Ocampo no end.

PUMAREN: Three more seasons

SUSPENSE OVER Pumaren back with La Salle

By Jasmine W. Payo

THE GUESSING game is finally over.

Franz Pumaren will be back as head coach of the De La Salle Green Archers for three more seasons.

"It's the decision of the school and the school owns the team," said Danny Jose, UAAP president and La Salle's athletic director. "The school feels that this is what's best for the team."

"I'm sure it will help (La Salle's bid to defend the title)," added Jose. "But there's no timetable yet as to when he'll start practicing with the team. It hasn't been discussed yet."

In fact, some of the La Salle players disclosed that they have yet to hear the news.

Sources said that Pumaren will release an official statement soon.

Pumaren, who steered La Salle to five championship titles, surprised everyone when he announced his retirement after winning Game 3 of the UAAP Finals last Sept. 30.

The 41-year-old mentor stressed he has "nothing more to prove" and that he has already "accomplished everything" he wanted for the team.

Pumaren, who has served as La

Salle coach for seven years, later took a vacation in the United States for "a much-needed break."

In his absence, assistant coach Gee Abanilla temporarily took over coaching the ICTSI-La Salle squad in the ongoing PBL Open tournament.

Before he left, however, La Salle president Bro. Armin Luistro, FSC, had strongly urged Pumaren to reconsider his decision to quit.

Pumaren hinted his comeback when he said he'll "strongly reconsider" Luistro's offer during the Animo Night party last Nov. 19.

He has also been watching ICTSI-La

Salle's recent games from the sidelines.

Meanwhile, the Adamson Falcons have appointed Mei Alas as their new head coach.

Alas, who replaced Lugi Trillo, had delivered successive titles for the Las Piñas College Huskies in the College and Universities Athletics Association.

Over at the National University, Manny Dandan will come back as head tactician for the NU Bulldogs.

Dandan, who replaced Roco Perez, is best remembered for having led NU to its first Final Four appearance in 2001.

sively attacking the basket," said Banal.

This time around, Aquino stuck out like a sore thumb on the court, scoring only two points and hauling down a lone rebound in 24 minutes of action.

In the second game, Shell defeated FedEx, 90-85, for its 12th win in 18 matches and tightened its grip on the second spot in the standings.

The Express dropped to 6-10 in a tie with Red Bull.

Jimmy Alapag and the 6-foot-9 De Ocampo paced the Phone Pals with 20 points each while Victor Pablo, Willie Miller and Mark Telan finished in double-double figures.

Pablo had 18 points on top of 10 rebounds which installed the 6-foot-4 swingman as the 22nd player in league history to have grabbed at least 2,000 boards.

By recovering from a 103-98 Shell debacle, the Phone Pals not only regained the lead at 12-5 but also secured at least a playoff for an outright semifinal berth.

"We didn't do anything special. We just played our hearts out and we won," said Banal.

The Phone Pals inflicted on the Realtors their 11th loss in 16 games, putting Sta. Lucia in peril of finishing either ninth or 10th at the end of the elimination round.

"This is a good game to win before playing against Ginebra," explained Banal. "They're playing the best basketball in the league right now. And a win like this boosts our confidence."

Meanwhile, Purefoods team manager Alvin Patrimonio will be feted by the PBA on Dec. 22 at the PhilSports Arena.

BIG MAN Yancy de Ocampo comes up huge for the Phone Pals, knocking in 20 points to power his team to victory.

Miranda steps out of Santos' shadow

DENOK Miranda is satisfied with his supporting role in the Magnolia-FEU team in the PBL Open Championship.

He doesn't mind playing in the shadow of team star Arwind Santos, but he's ready to step up any time.

Last week, the Ice Cream Wizards were in danger of having their winning streak snapped with Santos struggling for baskets against a lightweight opponent.

But Miranda came to the rescue, leading Magnolia's running game and scoring key points in the last quarter to lift the Wizards past the hard-fighting AMP-Ateneo for a 64-55 win last Thursday at the Letran gym.

The Wizards now own the tournament's longest winning streak after posting their seventh victory mainly through Miranda's 13 points and 4 rebounds.

The win also assured Magnolia an automatic slot in the semifinals, an incentive for the top two teams after the elimination round.

"He just showed what kind of player and leader he is," said coach Roy Banaag after Miranda earned the Player of the Week citation from the PBL Press Corps. "He's been playing well lately for us."

Magnolia remains on top with a 9-3 slate.

The other teams fighting for the remaining outright slot in the semifinals are Montaña Pawnshop at 8-2, followed by Granny Goose and Welcoat Paints at 6-5.

After taking an 18-point lead, Magnolia found itself under pressure when AMP-Ateneo pulled within six. But Miranda scored on a driving lay-up to quell the Eagles' comeback.

Santos managed to score only two points in the game but compensated with 8 rebounds.

Prior to the game against AMP-Ateneo, Miranda had scored in double figures just once in 11 games.

Despite his scoring woes, the newly wed Miranda ranks third in assists at 4.0 apg and fifth in steals at 1.6 spg.

The PBL has taken a break due to the holiday season and will resume on Jan. 4.

Two champs named Poe and Pacquiao

THERE was distinct chaos. The boiling crowds pushed and shoved. But the main picture in Manny Pacquiao's birthday celebration on Saturday was straight out of a Pinoy fairy tale.

Unlike in Pacquiao's last fight in Tuguegarao, where the crowd was estimated at close to 25,000, no actual count could be made of the poor villagers who came from all directions in GenSan to mob the world boxing celebrity.

Of course, everybody who came left amply rewarded.

Other than see and touch their idol, each villager got a crisp P100 bill, noodles, canned goods and at least three kilos of rice.

The procession to the Pacquiao residence started in the morning and continued to lengthen as sundown approached on Saturday.

Broadcaster Ronnie Nathanielson, no stranger to mammoth crowds, swore he had never seen so many poor people converge in one place on a single day.

By late afternoon, he said Pacquiao had to

BARE EYE

sent in 85 more sacks of rice.

By a plain estimate, Pacquiao, who presided using a bullhorn, was said to have spent P1 million last Saturday.

Nathanielson reported that the endless procession of Pacquiao admirers had been expected to end with the evening feast, highlight of the great boxer's 26th birthday celebration.

At about the same time in Manila on Saturday, an even longer procession continued to snake into the Sto. Domingo Church.

There, too, had been chaos, with several fans getting injured.

But unlike the mob in GenSan, the crowd in Quezon City did not come for a bite of holiday joy.

Of course, as in GenSan, the endless flow of people in Quezon City also came to hail a hero.

The endless stream of mourners moving past the handsome remains of Fernando Poe Jr., however, became a scene out of an unfilled Pinoy fairy tale.

The FPJ epic could've reached its climax with a victory in the last presidential polls.

Poe had tried to carry on with his fight, while his countless backers continued to swear their hero had been cheated.

Unfortunately, Poe's love affair with the poor people he loved came to a tragic end after he succumbed to a stroke.

Meanwhile, there seemed no end to the Pacquiao magic.

The boxing hero will never cease to draw great crowds for as long as he keeps winning.

But how to explain the great outpouring of love and grief, unmatched hereabouts, for FPJ, who could no longer fight his great fight for the poor he had dreamt of saving?

Maybe it's not improper to conclude that FPJ had confirmed his victory and heroism with his untimely death?

In fact, there's now this great puzzle on how FPJ could've lost the last election based on the endless turnout of supporters in his wake.

One barangay kagawad in our place yesterday tried to provide the answer.

He swore he saw how FPJ had managed to post a final lead totaling 18,000 votes in our city.

This edge, the kagawad bared, had been shamefully reduced to only 10,000 when he next saw it transferred to the certificate of canvass.

Suddenly, the man they had refused to call Filipino was now worthy to be a National Artist.

FPJ's supreme triumph, his true championship, however lies in the refusal of his loved ones for the actor to be buried in the Lungsod ng mga Bayani.

Not even Ferdinand Marcos had been deemed worthy of that.

STRATEGY DISCUSSION

Rosales, Delasin set World Cup meeting

By Francis Ochoa

ALTHOUGH terribly homesick, Jennifer Rosales is going to cut short her vacation to answer the most important call of all—that of her country's.

Rosales is going to leave the country in the last week of January to meet up with Dorothy Delasin and discuss their plan and strategy when they represent the Philippines in the World Cup slated Feb. 11 to 13 in England.

"I'm going to meet with Dorothy before the World Cup so we can talk about what we're going to do," said the 26-year-old Rosales.

"I really want to win this thing for the country. Dorothy and I want to be the first to win it for the Philippines."

Already, people are talking about the Rosales-Delasin tandem and Rosales revealed some of the players in the LPGA said they have a serious chance of winning the prestigious tournament.

"We have a big chance to win. Players are telling me that if Dorothy plays with me, we have a big chance," Rosales said.

ROSALES

The two former national golf team mainstays last played together for the country in the 1998 Asian Games where they salvaged a team bronze in Bangkok.

Rosales has always been proud of her roots and up to now, after having completed five years on the LPGA, she still gets goose bumps just seeing the Philippine flag during tournaments.

"Seeing my flag out there in

tournaments, it just makes me so proud. I've never been ashamed of being a Filipino."

In fact, after coming off a breakthrough year, Rosales said that part of the motivation that spurred her to her best LPGA season yet was putting the Philippines in the sporting map.

"I'm proud to be a Filipino," said Rosales. "I've always been. A lot of stuff has happened, like the floods recently, and I feel blessed that I'm able to give people here something to be happy about."

But Rosales feels the World Cup would be an even bigger reason for her compatriots to celebrate.

After all, Rosales and Delasin will be playing not for the prize money but will be representing the country against the best golfers in the world today.

"I'm kind of excited about that. We'll see what happens," she said.

Rosales said she feels no pressure going into the World Cup, even if expectations are high because of her partnership with Delasin. She added that neither will playing in front of a big crowd affect her game.

"Golf's about pressure," said Rosales. "It's part of the game and I don't feel that anymore. I also love playing in front of big crowds."

Rosales arrived Saturday morning and said she was "glad to be back home."

"I've really been homesick and I miss my family, my friends, the food here. I've been gone nine months and it's such a long, long time to be away from home."

Suns torch Wizards; Bulls gore Pacers

NEW YORK—Shawn Marion grabbed a personal season-high 36 points and 14 rebounds as the Phoenix Suns eased past the Washington Wizards, 110-96, Saturday to secure their status as the NBA's leading team.

One day after downing the Seattle SuperSonics in a battle of the two top in the league, the host Suns improved their record to 21-3.

Quentin Richardson contributed 19 points to the Phoenix cause while guard Steve Nash had 13 points and 11 assists. The surging Suns claimed their eighth consecutive win and 17th in 18 games.

In Charlotte, Jamal Sampson drained two freethrows with three seconds to play in overtime to earn a 101-100 upset win for the expansion Bobcats over the Houston Rockets.

Trailing 101-97, Tracy McGrady hit a three-pointer at the buzzer for the Rockets but it was not enough as the Bobcats celebrated their fifth straight victory at home.

Emeka Okafor, the second overall pick in last year's draft, sparked Charlotte with 23 points and 17 rebounds. Keith Bogans added 19 points.

McGrady had 29 points for the Rockets while Yao Ming chipped in with 16 points and nine rebounds.

In Orlando, Cutino Mobley notched 19 points as the Magic broke out of a three-game losing skid to pound the Denver Nuggets, 117-95.

Six players posted double figures for Orlando, including 17-point Dwayne Howard and 16-point Grant Hill. The Magic were in control from the opening tipoff and led by as much as 35 points.

Denmar Johnson had a season-best 18 points and eight rebounds for Denver, which has now lost four of its last five.

In Milwaukee, Allen Iverson poured in a NBA season-high 54 points to lead the Philadelphia 76ers to a 116-97 demolition of the Bucks.

Iverson's points haul was four shy of his career-best as the 76ers recorded their fourth win in five games.

In Cleveland, Paul Pierce amassed 34 points and Gary Payton nailed three important freethrows to help the Boston Celtics to a 114-107 overtime win over the Cavaliers.

Payton finished with 21 points, six coming in the final 67 seconds, including a three-pointer followed by three pressure-packed freethrows, which sealed Boston's fourth win in five outings and handed Cleveland its first home loss in 10.

LeBron James rebounded from his worst outing of the season to score 31 points but the 19-year-old was not around when the Cavs needed him most, fouling out of a contest for the first time in his career.

In San Antonio, Tony Parker and Manu Ginobili each had 21 points as the Spurs destroyed the Golden State Warriors, 104-85.

The Spurs, who trailed by 14 points midway through the second quarter, also got 12 points and seven rebounds from double NBA MVP Tim Duncan as they collected their fourth consecutive win, and 15th straight over the Warriors at home.

In Dallas, Dirk Nowitzki posted 15 points and 12 rebounds as the Mavericks crushed the Atlanta Hawks, 90-68.

The Hawks were restricted to 28 points in the opening half.

In Detroit, Darius Miles hit a freethrow with 0.5 seconds left in regulation to lift the Portland Trail Blazers to a 75-74 victory over the champion Pistons.

Nick Van Exel paced Portland with 14 points while Miles finished with 13. Rasheed Wallace had 17 for the Pistons, who lost for the third time in five games.

In Chicago, Eddy Curry picked up 23 points and 13 rebounds as the Bulls downed the undermanned Indiana Pacers, 85-71, for their third consecutive win.

Mavs honor US soldiers with front row seats

DALLAS—The national anthem meant something extra special Saturday night at American Airlines Center.

Being in the presence of 137 wounded men and women as a part of the first Seats for Soldiers created a buzz among the sellout crowd for the Mavericks' game, a 90-68 victory over Atlanta.

Clad in white T-shirts reading "United We Stand" on the front, the group flown in from Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, took up the court-side seats all the way around the floor and stood proud and tall during the national anthem.

"I can't believe I'm standing on the floor," said Mark McKane, a 24-year-old retired sergeant from Austin.

McKane lost his left arm on duty in Iraq after being hit with a rocket-propelled grenade. He also had two collapsed lungs.

Mavs season ticket holder Neal Hawks had people such as McKane in mind when he created the Seats for Soldiers event. Hawks and 47 other season ticket holders donated their front-row seats for the game (worth more than $150,000) to see that the soldiers wounded in Iraq and Afghanistan were treated like royalty for a day.

"Knowing that I had a tiny, tiny piece of giving something back—for all they've given, they've earned the right to sit there in the front row," Mavs owner Mark Cuban said. "It's because these folks are risking everything that allows us to enjoy all of this. We know how lucky we are, and sometimes you have to remind yourself that you can't take it for granted." New York Times News Service

Johnson turns back Tarver

LOS ANGELES—Glen Johnson, a virtual unknown until knocking out Roy Jones Jr., three months ago, won a split decision over Antonio Tarver on Saturday night in a matchup of the world's best light heavyweights.

The Staples Center crowd cheered throughout the final round, and when it ended, both fighters thrust their fists into the air, proclaiming victory.

The winner proved to be Johnson, who overcame Tarver's 4-inch (10-centimeter) height advantage to win, mainly by being the aggressor through most of the 12-round bout.

Judges Melvina Lathan and Chuck Giampa scored the bout 115-113 in favor of Johnson. Judge Marty Denkin had it 116-112 for Tarver. The Associated Press scored it 115-113 for Tarver.

The 6-foot-2 1/2 (1.89-meter) Tarver, a solid favorite, said he thought he won by dictating the pace and throwing the harder punches.

"I thought I hit him with some clean shots and hurt him around the fourth or fifth round," he said. "But Johnson was the better man this evening."

Johnson refused to say he was the best light heavyweight in the world.

"I'm still looking for Mr. Best. I would never say that I was the best," he said.

Johnson said Tarver didn't hurt him. "He knocked me off balance a couple times, but I was never hurt," Johnson said. "It was a real close fight. I'd like to fight him again."

When asked if he would take a rematch, Tarver replied: "Of course."

Tarver lost a controversial, 12-round decision to Jones in November 2003 before stopping him in the second round

May 15. Johnson knocked Jones out in the ninth round Sept. 25.

Both fighters gave up championships for the fight. The WBC stripped Tarver of his belt for not agreeing to fight mandatory challenger Paul Briggs of Australia. Johnson decided to relinquish the IBF version rather than fight the organization's top challenger, Rocco Hoya.

Nevertheless, Tarver entered the ring wearing a red crown.

Jones was 49-1 and considered one of the best pound-for-pound fighters in the world before losing to Tarver. Jones worked as a commentator on the HBO telecast of the bout and said afterward he thought Tarver won.

The 35-year-old Johnson raised his record to 42-9-2 with 28 knockouts. He didn't begin to box until he was 20 and turned professional three years later. AP utes of play against Atlanta. "I have learned that I belong on this level," Tabuse said. "I am looking forward to continuing my career and building on my NBA experience."

Meanwhile, the Cavaliers have suspended guard Eric Snow one

Snow, who is under contract for $5.48 million this season, will serve the suspension Saturday against the Boston Celtics. AP/AF

Teenager Phelps makes waves both in and out of the pool

Teenager Michael Phelps led the realms of stardom in a week at the Athens Olympic pool.

The 19-year-old from Baltimore was the focus of attention from the moment he declared that he would better the low American Mark Spitz's seven gold medals haul from the 1972 Munich Olympics.

He came away with one world record, four Olympic records, six medals and eight medals overpassing out on the quest for a fourth gold with a promise of a million dollar bonus from his sponsor.

In the end it didn't seem to matter. His sizzling performance in his will remain one of Olympic swimming's great achievements.

Phelps swam 17 times in seven days, who swam semifinals in his 100m events, and won—13 races in Muful week of my life" as he became the first swimmer and only the second man in any sport to win eight medals in one Games.

Superhuman in the pool, the year ended on a sour note however for the teenager when he was arrested for drink driving in Maryland.

But in Athens, Phelps looked as if he could walk on water as he established himself among swimming's elite.

Along with the likes of Australian heroes Ian Thorpe and Grant Hackett and Pieter Van den Hoogenband of the Netherlands, Phelps offered a view of what could be in store in Beijing in four years' time.

Thorpe showed that he is not to be overshadowed when he made the 200m freestyle his own, avenging his defeat by Van den Hoogenband in Sydney four years earlier by overhauling the Dutch swimmer on the final lap.

And Thorpe successfully defended his 400m freestyle title after uncertainty over whether he could compete. He was disqualified from the event for a false start at the Australian trials and got the chance to swim only after teammate Craig Stevens volunteered to stand aside.

Thorpe, undaunted by his third-place finish in the 100m free, said he would focus more on the sprint in the build-up to Beijing, as his haul of two gold, one silver and one bronze made him Australia's most successful Olympian ever.

UST, SSC spikers club foes

By Musong Castillo

UNIVERSITY OF Santo Tomas notched a fifth straight win yesterday, and though it was not in the same pretty manner in which the first four came, it was enough to keep the Tigresses on top of the Shakey's V-League heap.

The defending champions answered the start of each set flat and listless and needed to finish strong each time to hammer out a 25-22, 26-24, 25-19 victory over Lyceum at the Rizal Coliseum.

Later in the day, San Sebastian notched its first win by whipping Far Eastern University, 26-24, 25-16, 25-21.

Playing what coach August Sta. Maria described as their worst game in the three-week old tournament, the Tigresses rallied from sizeable deficits all game before improving to 5-0 in less than two hours.

Tall Roxanne Pimentel and Venus Vernal stood at the forefront of the Santo Tomas offense, nailing down the points when needed in a splendid display of superiority in the net which eventually doomed the Lady Pirates.

In a game marked by long rallies and littered with a number of silly errors, Santo Tomas dug deep into its experience and struck when needed most as the Lady Pirates lost for the first time in three games and dropped to 2-3 overall.

The Tigresses fell behind by as many as four early in the first set, by eight in the second and started 2-5 in the third before making a run each time and luckily coming out on top.

"I think my players wanted to go home for the holidays," said Sta. Maria in jest. "It puzzled me why the girls allowed Lyceum to build big leads before they played their game."

2 early gold for Chinese shuttlers

JAKARTA—Chinese shuttlers took the first two golds in the finals of the Indonesia Badminton Open on Sunday, one in the ladies' singles and another in the mixed doubles.

Second seeded singles player Xie Xinfang had an easy time defeating the only unseeded player to make it into the finals, Japan's Eriko Hirose, with a scoreline of 11-8, 11-0.

In the mixed doubles, China's Olympic team of Zhang Jun and Gao Ling beat England's Robert Blair and Natalie Munt, 15-9, 15-9.

In the first ladies singles' set, Hirose made an impressive comeback after trailing 1-4 behind her much more seasoned Chinese opponent, leveling the scoreline to 4-4.

Long rallies

Mixing long rallies with drop shots, Hirose was further assisted by Xie's errors.

The Japanese player even went ahead 5-4, but her good fortune ended there as the world's seventh-seeded player rediscovered her form and evened the score at 8-8 before winning it, 11-8.

In the second set, a merciless Xie gave Hirose no opportunity to even score a point, securing an 11-0 scoreline with a steep drop shot.

The mixed doubles saw a close first set, with the third-seeded Chinese duo clawing their way back from a four-point deficit despite the English team's strong and accurate smashes.

The Chinese began to gain the upper hand after 9-9 and took the set without letting the fourth-seeded English team score another point.

Tight game

The early part of the second set was also played tightly between the two pairs but again, the Chinese found their form in the later part of the set, especially after they got to a 12 points to nine lead.

An inaccurate smash by Munt gave the second set to the Chinese who had won the two previous points by lodging sharp smashes into their opponent's camp.

Del Rosario just misses King's Cup Open title

PAUL del Rosario, the country's ace jet ski rider, proved he's one of the best in Asia by salvaging overall runner-up honors in the World Watercross King's Cup Thailand Open 2004 at the Korat Airforce Base here recently.

Although his jet ski was unfit for the small tight closed course track, the two-time RP national champion ruled the final race to clinch second place in the 13-man field of the premiere Professional 1200 cc class that included Australian champions Anthony Antees and James Masterton.

"It was one tough event and I'm proud to bring home the runner-up trophy for the country," said Del Rosario, who's backed up by Petron Corp., Manila Cordage Corp., Network Jepposts, Skoked Inc. and D7 Media Vision.

Del Rosario, who had just recovered from dengue fever and still experienced asthma attacks when he came here, competed on a 2004 Yamaha boat which Americans Mark Dobson and David Harvey rushed to build and tested for only two weeks.

RP jet ski ace salvages second place.

With the tight course, it was no match for the powerful Seadoo RXP and XPL of the Thais, but Del Rosario proved his mettle nevertheless in his Pro class debut.

Former world champion and top Thai rider Chokkathai Molee of Thailand's Team Flamingo won the event and bagged the prestigious King's Cup—a 20-lb two-feet tall gold-plated trophy carried by Thailand's national guards and placed next to the portrait of their king.

He finished the four-race event with 198 points, just one point over Del Rosario. Ekchon Kingchansil of Thailand's N. Max-Maxima Team Paw took third place honors.

Del Rosario's feat made up for his disappointment at the World Jet Ski Championship in Lake Havasu, Arizona, in October where he was "allegedly" denied of the crown.

"A Philippine Show of Force" was how King's Cup race director Justine Lee described the performance of Del Rosario, who was accompanied in Thailand by RP-Networx team manager Dong Arcilla, mechanics Yannick Elnar, Edwin Copino, brother Robert Raymond del Rosario and dad Bobby del Rosario.

Molee was ahead in the title race after three moto races, but Del Rosario, knowing he could still wrest the crown, quickly grabbed the pole leaving the Thai world champ's Seadoo XPL far behind in fifth.

Kingchansil caught up with him in the last five laps but Del Rosario took the checkered flag just two feet ahead of Kingchansil at the finish.

Molee, who had accumulated enough points in the first three races, had to finish third in the final race to emerge the overall champion.

Whatever happened to the probe of imported race horses?

IN July 2003, 17 race horses from Australia arrived by chartered flight in Subic Bay under controversial circumstances. The importation generated much publicity mainly because the race horses were initially reported to have been flown into the country without paying taxes upon the recommendation of the Philippine Sports Commission. It was also reported that the said race horses were allegedly bought by Presidential son, then Pampanga Vice Governor Mikey Arroyo, with associates Lamberto Almada Jr. and Dante Arevalo as the dammy.

If I remember right, the Presidential Anti-Graft Commission was supposed to look into the controversy, but up to now there are no results of the reported probe.

Incidentally, one of the imported horses, American Woman, recently made a big impact on the local racing scene by establishing a new track record at the San Lazaro Leisure Park. The horse is also slated to participate in a forthcoming championship race.

Source said that someone very influential had ordered the imported race horses not to be run anymore to prevent the public from talking about it, but the principals have defied the order. "Nagpalanig lamang sila pero tinatakbo na ngayon ang mga kabayo (they only stopped for a while, but they are allowing the horses to run now)."

Almada and Arevalo later said they had paid the required taxes and presented documents to prove they were the owners of the race horses and not Mikey Arroyo. Almada, in particular, said he paid taxes amounting to P525,222 although the receipt he showed was dated Sept. 23 or nearly one month after the arrival of the 17 race horses.

On the other hand, PSC chair Eric Buhain admitted he entered into a memorandum of understanding with Almada wherein the PSC would purchase from among the 17 several horses the agency planned to use in the PSC equestrian program following Mikee Cojuangco-Jaworski's gold medal performance in the Busan Asian Games. But the deal did not push through because the PSC did not have the needed funds.

CLEAN LIVING

By the way, why did the fans boo Mikey Arroyo when he was introduced during Manny Pacquiao's recent fight at the Fort in Taguig? Was it a sign that the people are now growing weary of Mikey's newfound lifestyle? They say Mikey, who is now a congressman, was a nondescript young man whose early love among other pleasures in life was to own thoroughbred race horses. According to those-in-the-know, Mikey started with only a few horses, among these, Samahan and Sky Shuttle, but today the number of horses he reportedly owns is close to 50. Some people are simply born lucky, di ba?

SWEEPSTAKES DAILY DRAW. Kudos to Nilo Chancuanco, Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office assistant general manager for production and marketing, for introducing the "Sweepstakes Daily Draw" which entitles a ticket-holder multiple chances of winning daily with just one ticket. Here's how it works.

Each ticket is worth P10. Every day, a winning ticket is drawn. All tickets are included in the draw for an entire month, which means that a person that buys a ticket has multiple chances of winning, starting on the day he buys a ticket and continues up to the end of the month. And even if a ticket has already won the daily jackpot, it can still be drawn again and win for the rest of the month. A jackpot prize of P100,000 and consolation prizes totaling another P100,000 will be drawn daily. Draws are held every 4 p.m. at the PCSO Draw Court, third floor, PCSO Main Building on E. Rodriguez Sr. Avenue, Quezon City.

BIG LETDOWN. Many are asking why only two gold medals will be at stake in the dancesport competitions of the Southeast Asian Games next year. They say it is one sport where the Philippines could win not only two but from eight to 10 gold medals in the SEA Games. Filipino dance athletes have been performing extraordinarily well in recent years and that some of them, particularly the Latin dancers, are now ranked among the best in the Asia-Pacific region. These athletes are our strongest bets to win medals in the 2005 SEA Games, yet local officials did not see it that way. A pity.

Gamboa, So rule Chairman's Cup

RHAIS Gamboa and Hanson So Jr., saving their best for last, displayed excellent shotmaking to run away with the overall net and gross titles Saturday in the annual Chairman's Cup, the Manila Southwoods Golf and Country Club's final major event for the year.

Gamboa fired a net 61 and So Jr. matched par at the par-72 Legends course to dominate a record field of 500 players in the two-day meet presented by Mitsubishi-Diamond Motors, Royal Caribbean, Northwest Airlines, Wilson Sports, Thai Airways and Globe Platinum.

Over at the relatively harder and longer Masters course, Eugene Arriaga carried a net 68 to clinch Class A honors. Hanson So Sr., father of the overall gross victor, was a shot back and placed second.

The Class B trophy went to Camp John Hay's senior vice president for marketing, Sheen Bodi, who won over Sed Rosero via a lower handicap after making identical 67s.

Billy Gunberto (Class C), Yue Gang Wen (Class D), Jose Tajino (Class E), Cora

Sey (Ladies) and Doy Tan (guests/sponsors) were the champions in the other divisions.

Eugene Villanueva likewise joined the winners' circle when he won a brand-new Mitsubishi Lancer GLX, part of the huge array of raffle prizes worth P4 million that were given away during the Retro-themed awards night. Antonio Sy bagged the Royal Caribbean cruise and the world-class business class tickets to Miami, Florida, while Ed Guevarra got a complete Wilson Irons set.

Turf Co., Nestle, Club Leisure, CJH Dev't Co., CJH Manor, Britesmile, Miramar Tuna Belly, Starmaker Sand Beach Resort, TMS Shipping Agency, Evergreen, Kork Inc., Hotshots, Figaro, C-Lum, Vein Care Clinic, Phil. Wine Merchants and Citibank were major sponsors of the event held in honor of club chair Robert John Sobrepeña.

Sobrepeña again lauded the munificence of the sponsors for their continuous support of all Southwoods activities.

"On behalf of the board of directors, management and staff, we express our deepest gratitude to them, most especially to the presenters who have become the club's partners this year," he said.

Real Spicy simply too hot for foes

Wins Juvenile race by 6 lengths and with plenty left to spare

By Edwin Villanueva, Contributor

REAL Spicy ran the one-mile (1,600 meters) distance for the first time yesterday and easily conquered it as well as his rivals in the 2004 Juvenile Championship at the San Lazaro Leisure Park.

Showing his versatility, the prized chestnut of Hermie Esguerra simply tucked in behind Tiger Song and stablemate Euro Bucks in the early going before exploding away at the home turn to prevail with still a lot of speed in reserve.

At the end of the contest, Real Spicy was six lengths in front of Tiger Song, with Euro Bucks holding on to third spot, seven lengths adrift.

"Sobrang magaling, tingin ko magiging paborito sa Triple Crown sa isang taon (He's so good, I think he'll be the favorite in the Triple Crown next year)," said ace jockey Pat Dilema on the son of 1998 US Kentucky Derby and Preakness Stakes winner Real Quiet out of Spicy Tale.

With trainer Andrew Sanchez instructing him to let the horse glide along should anyone challenge them for the early lead, Dilema confidently wheeled Real Spicy within range of the pacesetters before stepping on the gas at the far turn.

By the time they bounded off the last bend, there was no denying Real Spicy as he whizzed by Tiger Song and Euro Bucks, giving Dilema all the luxury of looking over his shoulders in search of the opposition down the stretch.

"Mahirap na yatang makakita uli ng kabayong kasinggaling niya ngayon as a two-year-old (It seems it's hard to find a horse as good as he is right now). He reminds me a lot of my horse Time Master," said Sanchez, the former jai-alai star known as "Filipino," comparing Real Spicy with his former Triple Crown champion.

The win, Real Spicy's sixth straight since Aug. 27, was worth P1 million for Esguerra, who is currently in Sydney, Australia, to attend to his daughter's wedding. The Paridel, Bulacan, sportsman-businessman also got P209,250 for Euro Bucks' third-place finish.

Calling from Down Under, Esguerra said - "Salamat nakaraanayo (Thanks we pulled through). I would like to commend Dilema, my trainers and all the staff of the Esguerra Stable. And to the racing fans, thank you, thank you and Merry Christmas."

Tiger Song, ridden by Louie Balboa, settled for P376,750. Money for Rap arrived fourth, edging Real Spicy's coupled entry, Eye Candy, then came Cool Mount, In Command and Mania Magic. Pyramid Relaunch was scratched due to injury.

"Based on his performance, he has a good chance in the coming Triple Crown. We'll rest him for a while and race him again probably by late January next year," added Sanchez, also a former Philracom chair.

Justino "Nick" Atienza, Esguerra's other thoroughbred conditioner, received the huge Juvenile champion's trophy from Philracom head Jimmy Dilag, who announced the holding of more major races in 2005 with bigger prizes and incentives.

Real Spicy, who cornered P1,178,886 in daily double sales out of P1,328,620, covered the route in a fast 1:40 flat (25-24 24.5-26.5), a second shy of the record.

Anticipating what his rivals would employ, Dilema expertly held Real Spicy tight and did not bite the bait of Tiger Song. Instead, it was the Virgilio Camañero Jr.-guided Euro Bucks, more known as a stayer, who battled the pacesetter, giving Real Spicy ample time to strike when ready.

AGE-GROUP TENNIS

Villarete, Patrimonio champions

PHILIPPINE Columbian Association's Raymond Villarete crushed Christian Canlas, 6-1, 6-2, to rule the 18-under division finals of the Musum "Wahab" Akbar age-group tennis championships at the Philippine Columbian Association courts in Plaza Dilao, Paco.

Villarete, who led eight other netters, bagged his first major win in the local age-group scene.

Christine Patrimonio, daughter of basketball legend Alvin Patrimonio, easily defeated Regina Santiago, 6-2, 6-2, to dominate the girls 14-under.

The win was a sort of revenge for Patrimonio after Santiago bested her younger sister, Clarice Patrimonio, 6-3, 6-1, to take the girls 12-under title.

Clarice, the top seed in the 12-under girls class, defeated Irina Quinaladcan in the semifinals, 4-6, 7-6 (4), 6-1.

Villarete became the first unseeded player to make the semifinals after repulsing Nko Kang bak, 6-0, 6-0.

Ken Patrick Arevalo, younger brother of RP's No. 1 women's player Charina Mae Arevalo, kept the winning tradition by beating Vincent Atienza, 6-3, 6-2, to top the boys 14-under.

Arevalo tripped Jose Optencia, 6-3, 6-4, in the semifinals.

Tim Polero defeated Dheo Tallayod, 7-5, 6-4, to rule the 10-under unisex division.

Kim Saraza trounced Kyle Cordero, 6-3, 6-0, to capture the boys 12-under.

In the girls 16-under division, Trudy Amoranto outlasted Julie Em Botor, 6-4, 6-3, for the title.

James Murrell bagged the boys 16-under title after thwarting Mikol Mananario, 6-2, 4-0 (retired).

Michelle Pang dominated the girls 18-under category after defeating Amomito, 7-5, 6-2.

Amoranto defeated Angelica Ngo, 6-3, 6-0, while Pang shrugged off Botor, 6-4, 6-0, before reaching the finals.

Akbar, who awarded the trophies to the winners, said the event is aimed at discovering new talents for future international competitions.

"This is my dream. To see kids four or five years from now representing and winning in the international tennis scene including the Davis Cup," he said.

"With enough tournaments to hone their skills and proper training program, I believe this is not a far-fetched dream," added the Basilan governor, who also presented the successful PCA Open last month.

The event was sponsored by Dynamic Sports Corp., Chris Sports Plaza and Penn balls.

Spirit of 'Da King' looms over Baguio film fest parade

By Vincent Cabreza and Frank Cimatu
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

BAGUIO CITY—The show must go on. And so this city's parade of stars for the Metro Manila Film Festival-Philippines went on as scheduled on Wednesday despite the recent death of actor Fernando Poe Jr., acknowledged "king" of local cinema.

But actors Cesar Montano, Joel Torre, Sarah Geronimo, Mark Bautista, Paulo Contis and Aiza Seguerra opted to tour the city in barely decorated floats, their own gesture of mourning, according to one of the festival organizers.

Montano said he and the other stars attended the festival parade, held later in the day after Poe's death, because they wanted to "continue [his] legacy."

Speaking in Filipino, the actor told more than 500 people gathered at the SM City

Baguio after the parade: "We know 'Da King's' heart was devoted to making people happy," Montano said in Filipino. "So we have to carry on."

Montano produced and directed the Visayan movie, "Panagho sa Suba," one of the eight festival entries.

Jeers

Not all of the floats had stars in them. Residents who waited as early as 8 a.m. for the parade jeered at float participants they could not recognize: "Why didn't you bring more famous stars? What kind of parade is this?"

Montano said later, "Many of our colleagues could not make it. Had Mr. Poe not died, more would have come here."

"I'm sure 'Da King' would love it that we are carrying the torch," added Torre, Montano's co-star.

PRECIOUS MEMORIES. Divina's brooding son Dranreb, FPJ's godchild: "The voice of the people is the voice of God."

Divina Valencia comes home for FPJ

By Nini Valera

DIVINA Valencia, the '60s screen siren with the Veronica Lake curl over one eye, came home from the US last Thursday to pay her last respects to Fernando Poe Jr., her friend and former screen partner.

"He was a good friend of mine," said Divina in Filipino. "He's the godfather of Dranreb [her eldest son by the late actor Bernard Belleza]. I came back just to see him one last time."

Divina, 58, said she heard the news of FPJ's death at 8 a.m. last Sunday, California time, when a friend of hers called to tell her the news.

"I told my husband, Delfin Quesada, to call up his brother who is married to FPJ's sister Evangeline," Divina recalled. "[Delfin's] brother confirmed that FPJ had died, and I just started to cry."

Divina said that was the first time her husband had seen her cry. She said he urged her to return to Manila.

"So I bought a ticket and flew here the following day," she said.

Long line of love

Divina and Dranreb went to FPJ's wake at the Sto. Domingo Church Thursday night. The former actress was still sleepless and had not yet gotten over her jet lag.

She described the long queue of people who, like her, wanted to pay their final respect to the man who touched millions of lives.

"You can see from the long line of people who wait four to five hours just to see Ronnie that he is loved by the masses," Divina observed. "Not only the masses, but also the other actors who are there to condole with the family. Some of these actors live abroad, but they also came back just to bid Ronnie goodbye."

"You can see from the number of people who are in his wake how much love he gave in his lifetime and left behind. He built up relationships all his life, and he has helped a lot of people without self interest and without advertising his help. It's only now that you can hear all the good things he had done for other people."

Divina's friendship with FPJ began in 1965 when she became his leading lady in "Alabok sa Lupa," for which he won the first of Famas Best Actor awards (his second was for "Asedillo"), according to Divina. The friendship grew stronger after she married Bernard, another action star who was among FPJ's peers. When Divina gave birth to Dranreb (whose name is a reverse of his father's), now 35, FPJ stood as the boy's grandfather.

Even after Bernard was shot dead in March 1970, Divina kept his friendship with FPJ, describing it as a stabilizing factor in her tumultuous life with her husband.

Godfather's role

FPJ took his role as godfather to Dranreb seriously. He sent him to college in the US.

"After Dranreb graduated from high school, FPJ told me that his gift to him was to send him to the US," Divina said.

Dranreb said he last saw FPJ in the US on Sept. 26, 2003.

Asked what his relationship was like with FPJ, the brooding former child actor said enigmatically, "It's just between the two of us."

"There are other people who can say more," Dranreb added. "The memories I have of my ni nong are so precious that maybe, this is not the time to share. Everybody is giving him a tribute so I'm taking a step back. I respect the man and I respect what he has contributed to society."

"It's a bit belated and it's a bit like adding salt to our wounds because it has been said before. If I simplify this equation I would say... vox populi vox dei (The voice of the people is the voice of God.)"

CNN'S VERONICA PEDROSA

Is Best News Anchor also one of 100 sexiest?

By Irene C. Perez

HONG KONG-BASED Filipino journalist Veronica Pedrosa anchors the news on CNN, worked for media outfits ABS-CBN and BBC, wrote for a local newspaper, taught her Australian husband how to get off a jeepney, watches over her two kids, listens to Brit rock bands and confessed she was a "party animal" at Cambridge University.

And she does her own makeup, too.

Pedrosa was recently named Best News Anchor in the 2004 Asian Television Awards in Singapore for her work on CNN's "World News Asia," a two-hour program she presents with Andrew Stevens.

In an on-line survey, Pedrosa, 38-year-old mother of two, was also nominated one of the 100 sexiest news anchors.

Of her inclusion among the sexiest, Pedrosa laughed. "A hundred's a lot," she said. "I'm 99, right?"

Most difficult

"The great challenge for all of us who work in news [is] how do we make the important interesting?" Pedrosa told Inquirer Entertainment in an interview in Makati last Thursday. "How do we make the important compelling?"

"And for us who work for commercial networks, how do we make it so we could make some money? I'm just kidding," she added with a heavy British accent.

The mother of two who has no secretary and who does her own research has covered a number of major global and regional news stories, and interviewed Nobel Peace Prize winner Aung San Suu Kyi of Burma, East Timor Foreign Minister Jose Ramos Horta, New Zealand Prime Minister Helen Clark, Australian Prime Minister John Howard and East Timor President Xanana Gusmao.

But her most difficult interviews, she said, would be of victims, "ordinary people in extraordinary circumstances." These are people, she said, in stressful or traumatic situations who may not appreciate the intrusion of the media and are suspicious of their intentions and should be handled with sensitivity, education and training.

Learning the basics

How's a typical working day at CNN for the year's Best News Anchor?

Pedrosa gets to work at 3 p.m., checks her e-mail and reads wire stories. At 4:30 p.m., staff members and producers assess stories in an editorial meeting and prepare a lineup. After deciding on story treatments and gearing up for any break-in news, they go into the preparations for the actual show.

"HOW do we make the important compelling?"

Pedrosa thinks local media are doing pretty well. She acknowledged that she learned the basics from pitch-baiting for Ces Drilon in the '90s ABS-CBN news program "The World Tonight," then hosted by Angelo Castro and former Sen. Loren Legarda.

"I can see that they are very professional and I can see that they're really gone for the live coverage," she said. "Doing the same kind of thing that CNN does, trying to be in the place where the story is happening."

Pedrosa recently hosted "Eye on India," a World News Asia live special from New Delhi, and was amazed at how young Indian students idealized studying and working in their country, where multinational companies are rooming in.

"I find it really hard to speak to these young people who say 'You know what, I don't feel the need to go overseas anymore,'" she said. "It's very heartening that in a country where millions of the poor live, there is a growing middle class and a growing educated class as well that feels that India is where the future is."

Covering GMA

Of her writing years ago for the now-defunct Manila Chronicle, one of her vivid memories is of Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo as an undersecretary giving news briefings to reporters at the Bureau of Investments.

The President and Pedrosa met again recently. "She told me, 'Veronica I'm so proud of you,'" Pedrosa said. "But every time I look at her I think of the BOI!"

A traveler who has lived on three continents, Pedrosa was last home in Manila just last October for her dad's birthday. She visits her family in the Philippines once to three a year.

"I don't even have another passport, which is a pain," she said. "My husband [CNN cameraman Mark Phillips] complains. It takes forever to get a European visa!" Phillips dropped by during the interview.

Pedrosa recounted telling her husband, in a British accent, how to get off a passenger jeepney in Manila by saying to the driver, "Tabi lang po." He mimicked her, but in his own Australian twang.

Journalist by choice

Pedrosa was uprooted at age 4 after her mom, writer Carmen Navarro Pedrosa, authored a tell-all biography on former First Lady Imelda Marcos that led to their exile to London.

"We were refugees," she said. "My parents were very, very active in the exiled opposition. I grew up reading about the human rights abuses in the Philippines since I was 10."

But her mom didn't push her to pursue journalism and, instead, wanted her to be a doctor. She would have loved to be a social worker, though, but then her mom had to be paid she said.

Pedrosa's mother to Gabriel and Isabel 2 who are Australian British citizens and whom she brings with her to Manila. Her 11 p.m.

schedule allows her to have the mornings with her kids.

Wash and go

She likes television's "The West Wing," the novels of Jane Austen, and has just finished "The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Nighttime" by Mark Haddon.

CDs of Brit rock acts Travis and Coldplay are in her player, and she also listens to Black Eyed Peas and Beyoncé.

And yes, she fixes herself up for her CNN show. A consultant checks out her wardrobe and updates her look every now and then, but she takes care of "wash and go" hair, avoiding industrial-strength blow-dryers and hair gunk.

Veronica Pedrosa has come a long way, and aspiring journalists look up to her.

"I can still identify with you guys," she said. "I'm still learning. It just goes on and on. I'm just doing it longer."

Somewhere in the interview, someone from home texted her to get some chick peas from the grocery. "For a day," she explained.

She might be a CNN huggie but she is still Everywoman—reporting, on a wide range of events from the biggest live snake caught to the East Timor liberation, and still have time to play with her children and run errands for dinner.

2004's top 10 albums

THE TOP 10 albums of the year, according to Associated Press music writer Nekesa Mumbi Moody

1) "Confessions," Usher: This was the most overplayed, overexposed album of the year—and the best. It's hard to remember when a heartbreaking cad sounded so appealing.

2) "The College Dropout," Kanye West: Though technically a rap album, at its heart, West's stunning debut was every bit soul music. Its songs spoke of struggles of everyday life—from the small to the gargantuan—through gripping lyrics, biting satire and David Chapelle-worthy skits.

3) "Virgin Ubiquity: Unreleased Recordings, 1976-1981," Roy Ayers: This sweet collection of the jazzman's lost recordings is a wonderfully orchestrated symphony of funk and soul. Songs like "Sugar" will make you wanna dust off your old disco ball (or steal it from your mom's closet).

4) "Rebel Soul Music," Martin Luther: Like the black rock scene itself, Martin Luther—one of its most talented stars—has been producing sizzling music that's gone pretty much unnoticed. The pressure-cooker "Growing Pains" and the sexy "Truth or Dare" are standouts.

5) "One Blood: Una Sangre," Lila Downs: Though she's known as Mexico's leading lady of song, Downs crafted an album that encompassed all different genres and worldly influences with her latest, from blues to even a little rap.

6) "Launchpad," Particle: This jam band takes you on an intergalactic head trip with their trippy album. By the time the record ends, you'll be wanting another ride.

7) "Rbg: Revolutionary But Gangsta," Dead Prez: Like a lot of other artists, Dead Prez put out a record about war in 2004, but it had nothing to do with Iraq. They paint a bleak portrait, but offer compelling, and certainly controversial, ways to battle back.

8) "Afrodisiac," Brandy: At this point, many of you will surely be saying: "Brandy came out with an album this year?" Her third disc, "Afrodisiac," came and went faster than her faux marriage—a shame, because this disc, with major production work by Timbaland, was surely her best.

9) "The Grey Album," Danger Mouse, Jay-Z and The Beatles: Danger Mouse must be kicking himself right about now. The DJ/producer cleverly mixes the lyrics from Jay-Z's "Black Album" and music from the legendary Beatles' "White Album" to create the widely downloaded "The Grey Album," one of the most ingenious mashups to date.

10) "Finally Woken," Jem: Yes, this British import does sound awful lot like fellow UK songstress Dido, at least vocally. In a year when we heard more female voices from the alternative music scene, Jem's was the strongest. AP

IN 1993, award winning actor Cesar Montano's "search for old things" led him to an antique shop in Tokyo, where he bought an expensive black velvet top hat for no reason at all.

"I just like buying old things," Cesar told ENTERTAINMENT in an interview at his home in Quezon City. "[And] I liked the hat because, despite its age, it was still in good shape. It even had its own case."

He forgot all about the hat, Cesar said, until Marilou Diaz-Abaya's historical film, "Jose Rizal," was offered to him four years later. "I remembered that I actually owned a hat that was perfect for the role," he said. "It was then that I understood the hat's purpose."

"Rizal," produced by GMA Films, romped with 14 trophies at the 1997 Metro Manila Film Festival awards, including best picture and Cesar's first acting award. A year later, Cesar joined the Metro Manila Film Fest again via "Muro-Ami (Reef Hunters)," also directed by Diaz-Abaya for GMA Films.

This year, he will be seen in another entry, "Panagho sa Suba (Call of the River)," which he himself directed for his very own CM Films.

Nowadays, Cesar's hat is placed prominently on his office shelf, along with books that he loves and trophies he has won since "Jose Rizal."

Book. "I'm currently reading 'The Five Points of Calvinism' by Edwin Palmer. I'm also interested in action and suspense novels. I also like this one book about Filipino soldiers during World War II. This is a true story. This happened before the Bataan March."

"I read because, as a director, I'm always looking for new ideas. It's a must for filmmakers."

Accessories. "The black headgear is from Fubu. I also have it in blue and white. I usually wear this when I play basketball, tennis or boxing. It keeps my hair away from my eyes. I don't want to be fixing my hair all the time. This is the same reason that most basketball players shave their heads."

"I love watches. I collect them. This one that I'm wearing is a Daytona, my current Shoes. "I'm a size 12. My friends from where I grew up used to call me 'Buboy Paa.' I buy shoes abroad because I seldom find anything here that fits me well. Oftentimes, I just get frustrated. Italian shoes are good. I also like those that come from the US.

"I like this pair of low-cut boots that I'm wearing because it's made from soft leather. Paang magsasaka kasi ang paa ko (I have the feet of a farmer). I can't wear boots that are too pointed, only rounded ones fit me. Square-toes are okay, too.

"Shoes from Skechers are okay, like this blue pair that looks good with jeans. This fits me well because it's square-toed. My feet don't hurt at all.

"I like my rubber shoes to be light. For basketball, I wear low-cuts. This is so I won't sprain my ankle."

Shorts. "On normal days, you would see me wearing shorts. My favorite is this Abercrombie pair, because it's very comfortable. It's cotton."

Musical instrument. "I've had this acoustic guitar from Taylor for four years now. I bought this in the States. Maganda ang kalansing niya (It has a nice sound).

"I treasure my guitars because playing them brings back happy memories of my childhood. When I'm happy with my friends or when I'm feeling sad, or when it's raining and I can't get out of the house, I always have a guitar with me."

Bag. "This is made from real leather and it's 200 years old. No, just kidding. A German friend gave it to me when I did a small show there. He gave this to me November of last year, but he had been using it for the longest time. He's a musician and this is where he puts all his musical arrangements.

"Fubu, G2000 and Hanford provide most of my shirts. G2000 has good corporate wear. The designs are very conservative. Fubu is very sporty. Most designs are loose and best worn after gym or when going to the mall. Hanford shirts are made of good materials. Kumakapit sa katawan (They hug the body). They also go well with jeans."

"I hardly wear dri-fit shirts when I work out. I still prefer cotton because they really absorb my sweat."

Pants. "When I buy slacks, I make sure they go with most of my clothes. If you're an actor, you should really dress well."

"While I like my slacks to be a little tight, I prefer jeans that are loose. I go for the straight-cut and boot-cut types in denim. I don't like wearing high-waisted pants. But I'm not so into hupsters either, because I seldom wear belts."

'Midnight Express' director makes peace with Turkey

ISTANBUL—Movie director Oliver Stone, in Istanbul promoting his new blockbuster, "Alexander," took the chance last week to try to make peace with Turkey, where he has been vilified as the man who tarnished the country's image with his screenplay for the classic "Midnight Express."

"I never intended it to be against Turkey," Stone told AFP in an interview here. "It was against injustice... everywhere."

Turks have denounced Stone since the first screening of the award-winning 1978 film, based on the memoirs of Billy Hayes.

Hayes, a young American, was sentenced to 30 years in jail in Turkey after a protracted legal saga that began when he was caught at Istanbul airport trying to smuggle hashish out of the country.

Too much, too hard?

They have accused Stone of taking liberties with Hayes' book and writing a racist screenplay in which every Turkish character, without exception, is depicted as a villain.

The film is also rife with horrific prison scenes of rape and torture.

"Perhaps some of the zealotry, some of the anger came from being young and trying to make the point too much, too hard," Stone acknowledged.

But he added: "It was true that Billy Hayes did get screwed in the Turkish system. He was convicted for relatively nothing to 30 years and he was treated brutally in prison. So this is all documented."

"The larger picture," Stone said, "is that Turkey is not the only country whose prison system is not working. America has similar problems."

He recalled how he was booed when, at the Hollywood ceremony at which he picked up a Golden Globe for best screenplay for "Midnight Express" in 1979, he suggested that the United States take a hard look at its own prison system.

Coincidence

Stone was scheduled to have breakfast with Turkish Culture and Tourism Minister Erkan Mumcu at a luxury Istanbul hotel.

The exercise was supposed to have symbolic value, since the hotel—a regular fixture on "best hotel in the world" lists—used to be the notorious Sultanahmet jail, where Hayes was incarcerated before being moved to a minimum-security facility from which he eventually fled.

But Mumcu, who was held up in Ankara, could not make it.

The two were scheduled to meet later at another venue where, Mumcu earlier said, he would discuss with Stone the possibility of undertaking joint projects in this country, which has recently adopted legislation to encourage foreign production companies to film in Turkey.

New filmmakers' strengths and weaknesses

FOR THE past few months, we have been busy judging the entries of new filmmakers to next February's Cinemalaya Philippine Alternative Film Festival, in both its feature-length and short (20-minute) narrative competitions.

From this long involvement, we have acquired a clearer knowledge of new filmmakers' strengths and weaknesses.

Their best suit is their creativity, which results in alternative approaches, fresh takes and "irreverent" filmmaking that provides viewers a welcome alternative to the generally predictable and commercially "safe" movies seen on mainstream cinema screens.

On the other hand, some new filmmakers have a hard time graduating from short, artistic, symbolic and experimental filmmaking stances and formats that make it difficult for them to connect with the huge mainstream audience.

This in turn limits the audience's chances to benefit from new filmmakers' original concepts.

So, the quicker they learn to "go full-length," the better for the Filipino viewing public.

When it comes to the short narrative format, we observe that quite a number of new filmmakers are so hung up on visual experiments that they can't tell a good, eventful and emphatic story.

They also don't adequately develop plot and character, so some of their short films are visually striking, but otherwise inert.

This is a liability, especially on the local scene, because we sense that Filipino viewers generally love eventful storytelling on the big screen.

Some new filmmakers are similarly weak when it comes to handling actors. To begin with, they don't sufficiently appreciate the importance of astute, believable casting.

VIEWFINDER

Nestor U. Torre

Their lead players may be well-cast, but secondary characters are ineptly portrayed, resulting in weak productions that can't draw viewers into their all-important sphere of empathy.

In addition, a number of new directors are so focused on visuals that they don't know how to guide their actors to come up with imaginative and completely credible portrayals.

This is a major problem, because while it's true that film is a visual medium, viewers still need to relate to believable and emphatic protagonists. If the actor playing the protagonist is hammy, nervous, self-conscious or otherwise inept, there goes the film!

Some new directors are also weak when it comes to script analysis, thematic underscoring, film time as opposed to real time, and editing.

These limitations further compromise their efforts, and make it more difficult for them to be considered by producers for professional, mainstream work.

Despite these occasional limitations, new filmmakers should be helped to make a relatively hassle-free transition to full-length movie productions, because the industry and the viewing public need regular infusions of fresh talent to get local movies out of the desultory slump they're in.

'Destiny Fulfilled'

DESTINY'S Child has come out with "Destiny Fulfilled," its first full-length album since 2001's "Survivor."

The new album's 11 tracks pulse with contemporary rhythms and musical hooks, chronicling an emotional journey across the turbulent landscape of romance.

Songs include "Lose My Breath," "Soldier," "Cater 2 U," "T-shirt," "Is She the Reason," "Girl," "Bad Habit," "If," "Free," "Love" and "Through with Love."

Vanessa's Christmas

VANESSA Williams makes the holiday season especially bright with her second Christmas compilation, "Silver and Gold."

The new batch of Yuletide tunes includes "Christmas Is," "December Lullaby," "Winter Weather," "Mary's Little Boy Child" and "Silver and Gold."

She also sings "Joy to the World" with Brian McKnight, and Irish flutes and guitars give her rendition of "Silent Night" and "The Holly and the Ivy" a new vibe.

'Rites of Passage'

DISCOVERY Channel's "Rites of Passage" (tonight till Dec. 24, 10 p.m.) features episodes of the "Becoming a Man" series. They follow young men in remote villages as they attempt to pass tests, both mental and physical, that will decide whether they can officially be convicted men within their culture.

Episodes: tonight, "Becoming a Man: In Siberia"; tomorrow, "Mek-Path to Manhood," Dec. 22, "Becoming a Man: In Africa," Dec. 23, "Stick Fights and Lip Plates," Dec. 24, "Becoming a Man: In Melanesia."

'Buddha's Giants'

ON ANIMAL Planet at 10 p.m. tonight, "Buddha's Giants" shows how Asia's endangered elephants have played a crucial and varied role in Sri Lanka's rich and turbulent history. Replay is at 10 p.m. on Dec. 26.

LOS ANGELES—Hollywood star Mel Gibson, flush from the huge success of his religious film "The Passion of the Christ," has splashed out $15 million on a private Pacific island, a report said Thursday.

Montano said the Baguio parade was more orderly than the parades in other places. "This is my fourth time to parade here and the [people's] response is really incredible here," he said.

Bautista and Geronimo sang four songs for the SM crowd, followed by Segueria, who accompanied herself on the guitar. Montano later serenaded the people with American folk songs.

Gov't drops plan to increase oil tax

By Michelle V. Remo

THE DEPARTMENT of Finance has dropped the fiscal reform proposal to impose an additional P2 excise tax on petroleum products following criticisms by oil players that making them shoulder several new taxes will result in a heavier burden for consumers who are already affected by rising world oil prices.

Finance Undersecretary Grace Tan said the government has decided to impose the value-added tax on petroleum products and raise the current 10-percent VAT rate to 12 percent.

She said the government could have generated substantial revenue from the P2 increase in excise tax on petroleum, but added that the twin VAT proposals would be sufficient. The decision was announced after oil companies protested the additional excise tax, which earlier went together with the VAT proposals.

Earlier, a bill on the P2 increase in excise tax on petroleum products was filed in the Lower House by Rep. Danilo Suarez. House Bill No. 1323, if it were pursued, was expected to contribute P29.7 billion to government coffers.

But Tan said the executive branch actually backed out from the plan to impose a P2 increase in excise tax on petroleum products the moment it decided to adopt the proposal to lift their VAT exemption. She said, however, that some oil firms actually thought that what the executive branch was pushing for were both the P2 additional excise tax and the lifting of the VAT exemption.

"We can live with that because what's more important is to fulfill the objective of improving the VAT system," Tan said. She explained earlier that the government's lifting of the VAT exemptions of several products and services, including petroleum, would improve the government's efficiency in VAT collection.

Official estimates showed that the government was losing a hundred billion pesos a year from VAT leakages, and more than P200 billion worth of potential tax collection due to VAT exemptions.

With the government's plan to lift the VAT exemption of petroleum products, together with other products and services, it targets to improve collection efficiency by better tracking of the input-output VAT credit mechanism.

Tan said the DOF expected P25 billion in additional revenue a year from the reduction of the list of VAT exemptions, and another P30 billion from the 2-percentage point increase in the VAT rate.

Finance Secretary Juanita Amato said the proposed bills on the increase in VAT rate to 12 percent and on the lifting of VAT exemptions of several products and services would be consolidated into one bill. The proposal will amend the section of the National Internal Revenue Code that deals with the VAT.

After dropping the proposal to increase the excise tax on petroleum products, the Arroyo administration is left with the following revenue-raising measures intended to solve the country's fiscal problem: rationalization of fiscal incentives, a tax amnesty, implementation of a performance-based lateral attrition system for revenue-collection agencies, adoption of a simplified net income tax system, and an increase in taxes on cigarettes and alcohol.

Earlier, the executive has also dropped the plan to impose a franchise tax on telecommunication companies.

The fiscal reform measures are expected to generate more than P100 billion in additional revenue a year and are aimed at wiping out the national government's budget deficit by 2010. The budget deficit, which is the gap between higher expenditure and lower revenue collection for a period, stood at P199.9 billion last year.

6 oil, gas drilling contracts seen

By Abigail L. Ho

THE DEPARTMENT of Energy expects to award six more oil and gas exploration service contracts in the next several weeks, following the Supreme Court's reversal of a landmark decision on local mining laws.

Energy Secretary Vincent Perez said the government would likely award before year's end two more service contracts. Another four would be awarded by mid-January.

The DOE recently awarded to South Sea Petroleum Holdings Ltd. Service Contract 45, which would allow the company to do oil and gas exploration over the Agusan-Davao basin in Davao.

The service contract involves the exploration and development of 748,000 hectares of land.

Initially, South Sea Petroleum will do geological and geophysical studies on the land. This will include the drilling of three exploratory wells.

The Hong Kong-listed firm will be investing $2.75 million.

STOCK MARKET

Yearend window-dressing seen lifting stocks

STOCK investors are expected to continue shopping for stocks in the seasonal yearend window-dressing this week.

"The market is seen to sustain its uptick in the coming sessions. Trading will be boosted by yearend window-dressing and optimism brought by new tax measures.

The market will be testing its initial resistance at 1,830 while support is at 1,740," Jose Vistan of AB Capital Securities said.

Last week, the main index rose 67.35 points or 3.84 percent as investors cheered the passage of the "sin" taxes bill, a crucial revenue measure to plug the gaping budget gap.

BPI Trade said in its weekly report that telecom stocks such as Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. (PLDT) and Globe Telecom lifted the market last week.

San Miguel Corp. was also another gainer as it gears up to raise more capital through a stock rights offering next year. The offering is targeted to raise roughly $300 million.

Other gainers last week were Bank of the Philippine Islands, First Philippine Holdings, Metrobank, Petron Corp., SM Prime, Megaworld Corp., JG Summit, Empire East Land and Digital.

"The passage of a crucial revenue bill involving sin taxes helped boost market sentiment. The bill is now up for signing by President Arroyo before it becomes a law. The Philippine government is hoping to avert a credit rating downgrade. Interest rates were also unchanged despite the US Federal Reserve rate increase and the sustained rise in domestic inflation," BPI Trade said.

The market last week cheered the government's move to ratify a bicameral committee version of the higher excise taxes on tobacco and alcohol, paving the way for its signing into law by President Macapagal-Arroyo. The President is expected to sign it into law before Christmas day.

The measure is the first of eight proposed tax measures approved by Congress that seek to raise about P80 billion in additional revenues a year.

Additional revenue from the "sin" tax bill is expected to reach P15 billion a year.

A credit-rating downgrade would normally raise borrowing costs for companies when they try to secure capital through debt for their expansion activities.

Higher taxes on liquor and cigarettes, on the other hand, are expected to impact on listed firms such as food and beverage conglomerate San Miguel Corp. (SMC) and Tanduay Holdings Inc. (THI). Elizabeth L. Sanchez

CAP assures SEC on new investor

COLLEGE Assurance Plan Philippines, Inc. (CAP) has met with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) to assure the regulator that it was in talks with an investor from the United States that may provide as much as P400 million in loan to the pre-need firm.

SEC Chair Fe Barin said CAP officials led by CAP director Robert Sobrepena were accompanied by a Filipino representative of the US-based firm in their meeting. The terms of the investment have yet to be worked out.

Barin also said that CAP has drawn from its cash deposit with the Philippine Veterans Bank to pay P20 million in tuition liabilities to plan holders. CAP has already submitted to the SEC a list of schools and plan holders to whom the money was released.

CAP is now preparing to draw down another P20 million.

The SEC earlier allowed CAP to pay its plan holders using its trust fund. CAP could withdraw P110 million from its cash deposit with Veterans Bank in tranches and the pre-need firm has worked out a scheme to draw the amount in five tranches.

Barin said CAP would no longer be required to get formal approval of the SEC for the disbursement of each tranche but it would have to notify the SEC where the cash would go.

To keep intact its trust fund at the Veterans Bank, CAP would substitute the amount to be drawn with bonds of the Metro Rail Transit.

CAP has about P160 million in liabilities to various schools this semester. Elizabeth L. Sanchez

Investment commitments surged 253% to P165.3B

By Ronnel W. Domingo

INVESTMENT commitments in the first 10 months rose by 253 percent to P165.3 billion from P46.8 billion in the same period last year as a diverse mix of projects were registered in October.

Documents from the Department of Trade and Industry showed that the Board of Investments and the Philippine Economic Zone Authority approved 366 projects from January to October.

When fully operational, the projects are expected to provide 71,348 new jobs.

Investments approved by the BOI in the first 10 months accounted for P129.8 billion in new capital, an increase of about 430 percent from P24.5 billion a year ago.

At the same time, Peza-approved projects reached P35.6 billion or about 60 percent higher than the P22.3 billion registered in the same period last year.

Infrastructure ventures still comprised the bulk of the investment base as six projects for power facilities represented P114.9 billion or 70 percent of the total.

But Trade Secretary Cesar V. Purisma said the government

KEY to achieving accelerated economic growth is finding solutions to the country's fiscal problem, which the government admits can erode investor confidence, create balance of payments difficulties and further put pressure on critical infrastructure spending, if left unchecked. The country's declining competitiveness will also be addressed by increasing labor productivity, reducing transport and power costs and simplifying business procedures.

The Infanta that was to be

HOW SHORT our attention span can be, especially with issues that can have far-reaching effects on our lives and on our collective future.

The untold loss of human lives, properties and futures resulting from the disaster in Infanta, and neighboring towns Real and General Nakar, is now all but lost in the minds of the Filipino public. The news surrounding the disaster and the lessons we all must learn from it have ceased to become "flavor of the month" in the media. In fact, the attention lasted barely half a month.

It has been crowded out of the headlines and front pages by the untimely death of Fernando Poe Jr., which is taking up to 80 percent of news and public affairs programs in the media these days.

I am not saying that FPJ's death bears no important significance in Filipinos' lives; it does. The concerns outspokenly raised by his bereaved spouse reflect a lot of what is wrong with our government, our politics, our media, and our society in general.

And FPJ's death provides good occasion to examine what must be done to address these.

Unfinished business

But there is much unfinished business in Infanta that demands continuing prominent attention, and which must not be lost in all of us.

Scores, maybe hundreds, of dead remain to be found and properly buried.

There is a great deal of clean-up and repair that must be done. Food and vital supplies are running short in temporary relocation centers for hundreds of families who lost their homes and livelihoods.

Longer term measures are needed to put these families back on track. Schools must be restored at the soonest possible time, as the Infanta children could very well be the biggest casualties of this calamity in terms of long-term damage to their futures.

Beyond these, the

Cielito F. Habito

environmental plunder that had been highly instrumental in the calamity needs to be put in the consciousness of every Filipino, young or old alike.

Otherwise, the list of unheeded environmental lessons will just keep growing and go far beyond Ormoc and Infanta.

We like to refer to these events as "wake-up calls," but the way we are dealing with them, we have simply been repeatedly hitting the snooze button and going right back to sleep each time.

Are we waiting for someone to bodily pull us out of the bed before we do what needs to be done?

Busting local economy

A few months ago, I agreed to write a chapter for a coffee table book on the town of Infanta.

It was to be a book that would showcase the charm as well as the great promise of this quiet but fast-moving municipality.

Together with neighboring towns Real and General Nakar, Infanta was poised to become a new focal point for economic activity on the eastern seaboard of Luzon.

The Infanta economy had a lot going for it. Straddling a portion of the Sierra Madre Mountains, Infanta is ecologically diverse and a natural resource-rich.

Lamon Bay and the Polillo Strait provide excellent fishing grounds. This coupled with over a thousand hectares of fishponds has allowed Infanta to produce more than twice (208 percent) its own fish requirements.

Infanta was also producing more rice than it needs (132 percent), exporting its surplus to neighboring towns and as far as Central Luzon.

Industry was emerging, with increasing manufacturing establishments like bakeries, hollow block makers, furniture shops and rice mills.

The making of liquor from nipa sap was also an extensive cottage industry, with over 100 small-scale distilleries in operation.

Its trade and services sector was strong, making it the regional service center of northern Quezon.

With its location, it is the logical transshipment point for the Polillo island municipalities, with most of the products and travelers going to Polillo islands passing through Infanta and Real. There were over 300 business establishments in 1998, composed of banks, trading and commercial establishments, and service establishments such as tailoring shops, beauty parlors, and lately, tourism facilities.

Casual observation would have led any visitor to conclude that business was brisk. I certainly got that impression during my last visit there.

New growth area

Five Presidents have had grand plans for Infanta, with the area figuring prominently in the succession of regional development plans for the eastern environs of Metro Manila.

The Master Plan has come under various names, with each new President characteristically intent on putting a distinctive trademark to the initiative.

It was pushed as Lungsod Silangan under Marcos, and was part of the Calabarzon growth area pursued under Aquino, the Marikina growth corridor under Ramos, the Rizalque cluster of Estrada, and Arroyo's 10-Point Agenda.

The area's potential had not escaped the attention of investors, particularly large real property developers from Metro Manila.

At least a couple of them are known to have been buying up strategic properties in the area in recent years.

Metro Manila dwellers, including some celebrities and other prominent personalities, had been snapping up properties especially near or along the coast. Local residents would point to this property acquired by a TV personality, or that lot bought by a rich Makati businessman—word gets around rather easily.

Indeed, anyone with the cash to spare would have been foolish to not to invest in some Infanta real estate—until the disaster came.

Now just off the press, the book has taken on new significance as a valuable photographic and documentary record of the Infanta that was and was to be.

As such, the book is bound to become prized collector's item, and its publishers are using the opportunity to raise badly needed funds for the people of Infanta.

E-mail me at chabito@ateneo.edu or the sponsors at mgal-mogino@bpi.com.ph, or call 816-9439, if you'd like to obtain your copy, and help the people of Infanta as you do.

John Hay developer again defaults on lease payment

By Ronnel W. Domingo

CJH Development Corp., the developer of the John Hay property in Baguio City, has asked for a third restructuring of its arrears after it defaulted again on its lease payments, according to officials of the Bases Conversion Development Authority.

BCDA president and chief executive Narciso Abaya said in a press briefing that CJHDevCo's arrears has reached about P2.3 billion, of which P1.8 billion represent the principal lease, while around P400 million is in interest and surcharges.

Abaya said BCDA was not discounting the option to rescind the agreement with the Fil-Estate Corp. led consortium, which would mean a recovery of the former American military facility in Baguio City.

He added that the agency has yet to agree on CJHDevCo's latest request for a revised payment scheme, since BCDA has laid out its own plan to address the issue.

Abaya, however, declined to give further details.

BCDA vice president Aileen R. Zosa, who is in charge of planning and business development, said the real estate developer first underwent a restructuring program in 2000, which covered new terms of payment for leases for the same year as well as for 1999.

A second restructuring was implemented last year, when CJHDevCo defaulted on a P50-million payment due in December 2003.

Zosa said payments under restructuring are slapped an interest of 12 percent and an additional 3-percent surcharge.

Under the original lease agreement, CJHDevCo committed to pay P425 million per year in the first five years of the 25-year contract that came into effect in 1996.

Beginning the sixth year, or 2002, payments would go down to P150 million or 5 percent of gross earnings, whichever is higher.

Abaya said CJHDevCo's current failure to make the lease payments stemmed from a Supreme Court decision issued last October which voided the tax-exempt status of the John Hay property.

In another development, BCDA reported that it generated P1.4 billion in revenues this year from the sale and lease of military base lands under its asset disposition program.

Firm to expand palm oil venture

SARANGANI Province—A Singaporean investor engaged in palm oil production has started expanding its operations, according to Gov. Miguel Dominguez.

Dominguez said that CK Chiang of Singapore, which has existing palm oil plantations and oil mills in Bohol, Agusan Del Sur, and Palawan, bought a 300-hectare land in Maitum and Kiamba towns.

Dominguez said planting could take place early next year.

"This is just the start. We will try to find more areas for palm oil plantation once the project kicks off. We will convince and encourage our farmers to plant palm oil as we need at least a 10,000-hectare plantation before a palm oil mill can be put up," he said.

NCCP wrong on mining law

SHARON Ruiz-Duremdes, general secretary of the National Council of Churches in the Philippines, wrote to the Inquirer that the NCCP was "greatly dismayed at the Supreme Court decision reversing its earlier ruling on the Philippine Mining Act of 1995."

Last April, the court ruled that the Financial and Technical Assistance Agreement under the Mining Act was unconstitutional. The FIAA is a contract between the government and a foreigner. Basically, the foreigner pours in money and technical expertise to develop and operate a mine.

After the investor has gotten back his investment from the initial sales of minerals (usually the sales for the first five years), he then takes only 40 percent of the ensuing income. The 60 percent is split, in fixed percentages, by the barangay, the municipality, the province and the national government. The FIAA is a close relative of the build-operate-transfer (BOT) agreements on toll highways.

Now, the Supreme Court, after going over a motion for reconsideration, has ruled that the FIAA is constitutional, after all.

Outdated and obsolete

The NCCP is "greatly dismayed" over the new ruling, or so claims the secretary general. Was this dismay agreed upon in a general membership meeting, a synod, a referendum, or a board meeting? Or was Ruiz-Duremdes working alone?

She claims that the NCCP affirms its stand against the liberalization of the mining industry by calling for the scrapping of the Philippine Mining Act of 1995. Was this affirmation arrived at in a general membership meeting? Or did Ruiz-Duremdes act alone?

If the 1995 law is scrapped, then we will be scrapping all its progressive features, such as environmental protection. The mining industry will be regulated under the old law, which is outdated and obsolete.

If, indeed, the NCCP as a whole, stands against the "intensified extraction of our mineral resources endowed by the Almighty Creator," it is time to review the age-old relationship between the churches and the industry.

If there were no mining in the time of Pontius Pilate, there would have been no nails of iron, no Crucifixion, no Redemption. For 2,000 years, the Christian churches, Catholic and Protestant, have been the biggest users of products of the mining industry. Cathedrals and basilicas rise to the skies on skeletons of structural steel. The pater, chalice and the monstrance are all of solid gold.

Dishonest and hypocritical

Today, NCCP would not be able to build a barrio chapel without using reinforcing bars, cement, gravel, sand, and corrugated iron sheets. The chapel will not be lighted without copper wires and tungsten filaments.

On May 21, 2003, the Inquirer carried a story on page one that the United Church of Christ of the Philippines, among other organizations, was a front of the Communist Party of the Philippines. In a speech in Cagayan de Oro last July, my very good friend, Caesar Aguirre, president of the Northern Christian College in Laoag, said: "the reality is that those who are perceived to be involved with the Communist Party of the Philippines and its front organizations are deeply entrenched in the leadership of the UCCP at all levels—national, jurisdictional, conference and sometimes local church."

Aguirre went on: "One cannot be a member of both a Christian church and a communist organization without being thoroughly dishonest and hypocritical... One has to renounce one affiliation or the other."

Lousy communist

In her letter to the Inquirer, Ruiz-Duremdes, not only was maliciously inaccurate, but she clung closely to the communist line against all kinds of economic development in the barrios. She has to be a lousy communist.

My suggestion to her is this: please read the Mining Act. It is clear in her letter that she has not read it at all. If she does not have a copy, I will send her one.

Finally, she should also read the Bible. I am not much of a Bible reader myself, but her letter must have broken not a few verses of the Good Book.

Give tax amnesty a chance, says DOF

By Michelle V. Remo

THE DEPARTMENT of Finance is asking the public to give the proposed tax amnesty a chance.

DOF officials have convinced critics that the proposal, although considered a failure in the past, will fulfill the objective of widening the tax base to beef up revenue collection this time around.

Finance Undersecretary Grace Tan said in an interview that the DOF would not drop the tax amnesty plan just because skeptics—including the business sector and foreign creditors—did not buy the idea that it would boost the country's ailing fiscal sector.

"From the very beginning we have not wavered on our stand," said Tan.

She added that the DOF would push for the tax amnesty proposal until it breezes through Congress.

Tan said that what would make the current tax amnesty plan a success in boosting government's revenue is the twin proposal of mandatory and regular filing of statements of assets, liabilities and net worth (SALNs) of all taxpayers. With the database of taxpayers' SALNs, the government will be able to track down discrepancies between tax liabilities and actual tax remittances.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue is currently preparing its database system to accommodate the huge volume of taxpayers' data, the finance official said.

Business groups, such as the Makati Business Club (MBC), were not in favor of having another tax amnesty because, they said, it would only encourage tax

The MBC earlier warned that granting amnesty to tax evaders now would only invite other taxpayers to delay their tax payments until the time the government would offer another amnesty program.

The International Monetary Fund also earlier expressed a disapproving comment on the tax amnesty. The multilateral lender said that unlike other fiscal-reform measures of the Arroyo administration, the tax amnesty was really not a program for revenue generation.

But according to the DOF, the grant of a one-time tax amnesty, if it comes with a tool to detect future tax delinquency, will not fail.

Tan clarified that the granting of a one-time tax amnesty is just a component of the plan to require the mandatory and regular filing of SALNs. She said it is the filing of SALNs that will help government catch tax delinquents and collect appropriate taxes.

The tax amnesty plan, one of the legislative proposals of the Arroyo administration to ease the country's fiscal problem, has already been approved on second reading by the House of Representatives.

Under House Bill No. 2933, individuals and companies with unpaid taxes for 2003 and prior years may apply for an amnesty. Qualified applicants will only be required to pay an amnesty tax equivalent to 3 percent of their net worth as of end-2003 in lieu of their unsettled tax liabilities.

As a safeguard, taxpayers with pending criminal cases of tax evasion, graft and corruption, and money-laundering will not be entitled to an amnesty.

But taxpayers with pending initial assessment notices by the Bureau of Internal Revenue or BIR will still be covered by the amnesty. They will be required to pay 10 percent of their tax liabilities, exclusive of interests, surcharges and penalties, and in addition to the 3-percent amnesty tax.

Those who have been given final assessment notices by the BIR may also apply for an amnesty. But, in addition to the 3-percent amnesty tax, they will also have to pay 25 percent of the amount of tax assessed, exclusive of interests, surcharges and penalties.

The tax amnesty plan is expected to generate some P16 billion in additional revenue for the government by encouraging underground businesses to come out and become legitimate taxpayers.

Oil exec fears hike in fuel prices by 50¢

By Abigail L. Ho

THE GRADUAL but steady increase in world crude prices and the impending imposition of a higher tariff on crude and refined petroleum product imports will likely hike local pump prices by a minimum of 50 centavos a liter, an oil industry executive said.

Fernando Martinez, Independent Philippine Petroleum Companies Association chair, said the slowly rising cost of crude in the world market would likely jack up local prices by 20 centavos a liter, while the imposition of a 5-percent levy on crude and finished product imports starting Jan. 1, 2005 would affect pump prices by 30 centavos.

If current prices, though lower than those posted in October and November, would be sustained up to next month, he said local oil firms might have to implement price increases, particularly on the socially sensitive diesel.

Local oil firms had tried to hold off price increases for diesel because of the impact these would have on the operational costs of the public transport sector.

However, recent sky-high prices prompted local firms to jack up the prices of both gasoline and diesel, with higher price increases slapped on gasoline to subsidize the relatively lower price hikes imposed on diesel.

Martinez said local oil firms still had some P1.50 a liter in diesel under-recoveries to recoup, while margins in gasoline only reached P1 a liter. Under-recoveries refer to hikes in international prices that are not reflected in local pump prices.

Although the Department of Energy and consumer watchdog Consumer and Oil Price Watch had both said that a price rollback was in order right about now, Martinez said it would be difficult to speculate on prices due to the volatility of international market prices.

As of Dec. 15, the benchmark Dubai crude increased slightly to an average of $33.66 a barrel, from only $33.55 a barrel two days before.

While the price of unleaded gasoline based on the Mean of Platts Singapore (MOPS) benchmark for refined petroleum products stayed relatively low at an average of $45.31 a barrel as of Dec. 15, MOPS-based diesel again increased to a Dec. 1-15 average of $51.08 a barrel from $50.92 a barrel two days prior.

"If crude prices in January are higher than those in December, we don't know how we can maintain current pump prices, especially in diesel," he said.

BSP to sink in $100M in proposed Asia bond fund

By Doris C. Dumlaog

THE BANGKO Sentral ng Pilipinas plans to contribute $100 million to the proposed $2-billion Asian Bond Fund 2 recently launched by 11 central banks and monetary authorities comprising the Executives' Meeting of East Asia Pacific Central Banks (EMEAP).

BSP Governor Rafael Buenaventura said the EMEAP's $2-billion investment in ABF2 was an amount the group members considered "neither too large that it would crowd out private sector investors, nor too small that it could not benefit from economies of scale in terms of supporting the necessary infrastructure for the fund."

The ABF2, which will invest in domestic currency bonds issued by sovereign and quasi-sovereign issuers in EMEAP economies—except Australia, Japan and New Zealand—builds further on the successful launch of the first stage of the Asian Bond Fund (ABF1) in June 2003.

The first Asian Bond Fund worth $1 billion is now invested in US dollar-denominated bonds issued by sovereign and quasi-sovereign issuers in eight EMEAP markets. The BSP likewise shelled out $100 million for the ABF1.

The framework for ABF2 comprises the Pan-Asian Bond Index Fund (PAIF) and the eight Country Sub-Funds. Its implementation shall be divided into two phases.

In Phase 1, investment will be confined to EMEAP central banks only. In Phase 2, the eight Country Sub-Funds and the PAIF will be open to investment by other public and private sector investors.

The PAIF, subject to the approval by the relevant authorities, will be based in Singapore and listed in Hong Kong. The eight Sub-Funds will be based in their respective jurisdictions and, where appropriate, listed on the respective stock exchanges in the eight EMEAP economies.

"The portion of the Philippines in the PAIF and the Philippine Sub-Fund will be invested mostly in government securities," Buenaventura said. "For phase 2, the Philippine Sub-Fund is envisioned to be listed either at the Philippine Stock Exchange or at the soon-to-be launched Fixed Income Exchange."

The BSP chief said the listing of the Philippine Sub-Fund would facilitate price discovery and enhance the secondary trading of the fund.

The launch of ABF2 marks a watershed in central banking cooperation to promote the development of the domestic and regional bond markets in Asia, he said.

"The BSP believes that the ABF2 will have a significant developmental impact on the Philippine domestic bond market which is crucial to the country's long-term economic stability," Buenaventura said.

Other members of the EMEAP group are: Reserve Bank of Australia, People's Bank of China, Hong Kong Monetary Authority, Bank Indonesia, Bank of Japan, Bank of Korea, Bank Negara Malaysia, Reserve Bank of New Zealand, Monetary Authority of Singapore and Bank of Thailand.

PLDT, Globe shrug off threat of downgrade

By Charissa S. Batino

ANY RATING or outlook downgrade on the debts of the Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. and Globe Telecom Inc. will not hurt the two firms, according to PLDT and Globe officials.

"We are not likely to borrow next year," said PLDT president Napoleon Nazareno in an interview. "In that sense, we will not be directly affected by the outlook downgrade."

The PLDT chief pointed out that the company had been reducing its total obligations. Today, the telco giant is scheduled to prepay a $106-million loan. This would reduce the debt at the parent firm level to about $2 billion.

"We are paying down debt," Nazareno said. "For that reason, we are in fact viewed as an improving credit."

Defin Gonzalez, Globe chief financial officer, on the other hand said that the company would not be issuing any new bonds next year.

Globe sold P3-billion worth of five-year bonds in the first quarter and raised $100 million of bonds due in 2012.

"I see no impact on our borrowings next year as we have no plans to raise new bonds," the finance chief said.

Gonzalez had earlier expressed preference for a peso loan to help finance Globe's estimated $350 million capital expenditures in 2005.

Gonzalez said that the outlook downgrade on Globe merely followed the same action taken by Fitch Ratings on sovereign debt. Fitch had earlier revised its outlook on Philippine debt to negative from stable on account of fiscal weakness and increasing public sector debt.

Fitch stressed that the outlook downgrade on PLDT and Globe was in line with the sovereign debt. Nazareno, however, admitted that on a macroeconomic level, PLDT and all other companies would feel the impact of any downgrade on sovereign debt.

"We are not spared on a macro level from the negative effects of a sovereign downgrade," he said.

Fitch said it kept a stable outlook on PLDT's long-term peso borrowing, believing this would not be affected by any adverse changes in the sovereign grade.

A downgrade in the rating or even the outlook tends to raise the cost of the rated firm's borrowing as it indicated more risks, giving investors more reason to demand a higher return for their placements.

The debts of PLDT and Globe are rated BB—two notches below investment grade—by both Fitch and Standard & Poor's.

Moody's Investors Service gave the two phone giants an equivalent mark of Ba2. But the New York-based agency had warned of a possible downgrade.

In April, Fitch upgraded the rating of PLDT's local and foreign currency debt to BB from BB minus after it was announced that Smart Communications Inc., PLDT's cash rich unit, would buy debts and control of Pilipino Telephone Corp.

PLDT is planning to cut debts by at least $500 million next year.

PLDT's debt reduction strategy is more ambitious in 2005 compared to this year. It plans to shave off $350 million in its outstanding obligations. The decision to prepay debt would bring to $450 million the total borrowings PLDT retired in 2004.

Of the PLDT Group's outstanding $2.99-billion debt, $2.2 billion are owed by the fixed-line business. Wireless subsidiaries Smart and Pritel have a combined obligation of $718 million.

As of end September, Globe had around $926 million in debt, 80 percent of which are foreign denominated. With its foreign exchange swap contracts, Globe's foreign denominated debt has effectively been reduced to 55 percent of total debt.

Globe has $160 million of debts maturing in 2005 and $168 million in 2006. The company said it has enough internal funds to settle its debts even as third quarter profits of P2 billion fell 34 percent against the same period last year.

Gonzalez said the company would continue to hedge its foreign exposure. He said of the 55 percent of Globe's debt in dollars, about 40 percent was hedged.

UNDP, Australia agency boost RP lending firms

By Romel W. Domingo

THE UNITED Nations Development Program and the Australian Agency for International Development are firming up an agreement to share the $1-million cost needed to develop the local microfinance sector.

The UNDP said in a statement that once finalized, the facility would be used to extend the National Anti-Poverty Commission's microfinance sector strengthening project (MSSP).

UNDP resident representative Deborah Landey said microfinance was a critical component of poverty reduction that lay at the heart of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) as well as Malacañang's 10-point agenda.

The MDG agenda is the pledge of over 100 countries during a 2000 summit to address issues including poverty and hunger reduction, achievement of primary education, promotion of gender equity, and reduction of child mortality.

Landey said the extension of the MSSP would mark the International Year of Microcredit in 2005. The celebration is meant to step up efforts to make microfinance facilities accessible to more beneficiaries.

The MSSP was designed to meet the rising demand for microfinance services by underserved poor households in the countryside.

This recently concluded program contributed to almost a quarter of the national target of 1 million clients by helping Center for Community Transformation, LifeBank and Center for Agriculture and Rural Development expand their outreach using the Association for Social Advancement methodology—a program first used in Bangladesh.

CCT, LifeBank and CARD reported a 134-percent increase in clients over the baseline set 18 months at the start of the project.

The UNDP said the MSSP was also rated recently as the best performing UNDP-supported program among 66 countries evaluated in a survey sponsored by the Consultative Group to Assist the Poor.

Metrobank to auction MPC's Fort Gov't to launch integrated anti-corruption drive in '05

METROBANK has obtained a court-approved foreclosure order on Metro Pacific's remaining 10-hectare-plus Fort Bonifacio property as well as 20 condominium units in the posh Pacific Plaza Towers.

According to the grapevine, Metrobank formally served the foreclosure order on MPC Friday afternoon.

Worse, Metrobank has already set a public auction for MPC's remaining crown jewels tomorrow, after having published as required the notice of the sheriff sale in a hardly known trade paper.

The seized 10 hectares of still undeveloped land are located along Kalayaan Avenue and Gate 1 of the former military reservation. MPC chair Manuel V. Pangilinan at one point considered relocating the bulk of the PLDT operations there in a planned Microsoft-type "campus" environment.

According to the grapevine, Metrobank until last month was considering a combination cash payment and asset swap with MPC to help the latter extinguish its P2.4-billion obligation.

It was not immediately clear what precipitated Metrobank to cut off negotiations and instead file extra-judicial proceedings with the Pasig Regional Trial Court to foreclose on the real estate mortgage.

According to the grapevine, MPC was caught by surprise by the court order when it first heard of it unofficially.

Both Metrobank and MPC declined to comment.

With the loss of Fort Bonifacio as a result of the currency crisis, first, the Ayala, and now, to Metrobank, MPC's once considerable real estate empire has been reduced to the Terrazas de Punta Fuego and Costa de Madera resorts in Batangas, the Pacific Mall in Lucena, plus other provincial projects.

These projects, in various stages of arrested development, are scattered in Cabanatuan and General Santos cities, Batulao (Batangas), Urdaneta and Calasiao (Pangasinan), Talisay (Cebu), San Pedro (Laguna), and Lemery (Batangas).

Pacific puzzler

AND SPEAKING of Metro Pacific, its Hong Kong-based parent First Pacific Co. has been named as one of the 21 respondents in absconder proceedings initiated by Hong Kong's Independent Commission Against Corruption under the colony's anti-money laundering ordinance.

First in the list of those respondents is a Filipino national, Amador Pastrana, 32, who has been identified in previous news reports as the "king" of illegal boiler room operations in the region.

It is not clear what role, if any, First Pacific was being implicated for. The absconder proceedings, if successfully concluded with the HK Court of First Instance, would lead to the confiscation of certain assets that would be disclosed when the trial gets underway in March.

COCKTALES

Victor C. Agustin

According to a published notice of legal proceedings, First Pacific is being made to answer under the so-called Section 8 of the Organized and Serious Crimes Ordinance Cap 455, which requires money changers and remittance centers to comply with anti-money laundering measures such as customer identification and keeping of transaction records involving HK$20,000 or more.

The ICAC coordinated with the Securities and Exchange Commission through Assistant Director Ma. Elmira Alconaba of the Compliance and Enforcement Department to serve the required notices to the Philippine-based parties.

Of the 21 respondents, it appears that only Pastrana and one other company are classified as Filipinos.

The majority are apparently HK-registered companies.

By Michelle V. Nemo

THE NATIONAL government is preparing to launch next year an integrated anti-corruption drive in 2005.

The plan was hatched during a three-day anti-corruption workshop that had experts from Hong Kong as resource persons.

During the workshop held last Dec. 15-16, Finance Secretary Juanita Amatong said representatives from various government agencies had plotted the national government's action plans against corruption.

The workshop lead resource person was Hong Kong's top anti-corruption leader Tony Man-wai Kwok.

"We now have specific action plans that we will pursue to prevent and deter corruption and, at the same time, educate people on how to enforce anti-corruption practices," Amatong said in a press briefing last Friday.

The Philippine government, whose suffering from a fiscal crisis is partly blamed on corruption, wants to imitate the success of Hong Kong in implementing strict and efficient anti-corruption programs.

During the workshop, participating government agencies were able to develop the Integrity Development Action Plan (IDAP), which calls for the implementation of several anti-corruption measures.

The IDAP is divided into three categories: prevention, deterrence and education.

Under the prevention category, one measure will be the adoption of a single ID (identification) system for government officials and employees, and the implementation of electronic bidding for government infrastructure projects, and procurement of goods and services to promote transparency.

The IDAP also calls for the institutionalization of a performance-evaluation system, which is intended to be done through the conduct of cross-rating reports both by individuals and organizations.

Another is the implementation of an integrity check system that will apply to the recruitment and promotion of government personnel, and the conduct of the so-called Integrity Development Review among corruption-prone agencies. The recommendations of the study will be the basis for the development of control systems in government agencies.

Lastly under the prevention category, the IDAP calls for the limitation in the salary deductions of government employees to allow them to have decent take-home pay. This way, government employees will be less tempted to engage in corrupt practices. The IDAP suggests that the threshold for monthly salary deductions, such as for payments of loan amortization and services fees for private lenders, be set at P4,951.

To deter corruption, IDAP calls for the creation of an internal complaint unit in each government agency, and its adoption of protection measures for whistle-blowers.

The government also intends to have names of offenders published in an online database for public access.

To educate government workers to enforce anti-corruption programs, IDAP calls for several learning programs, such as the preparation of agency-specific code of ethical standards. Under this plan, all government agencies are tasked to have customized code before the end of 2005.

Telcos bid to raise VAT rate in lieu of new taxes backed

By Clarissa S. Batino

THE TELECOM industry should not be singled out by the government in trying to raise more revenue and focus should instead shift in increasing the value-added tax rate, according to the Foundation for Economic Freedom.

The Arroyo administration is targeting to raise at least P10 billion in additional revenue from the telecom sector as part of its P80-billion revenue reform package.

"Improvements in telecom services and costs have not only led to fostering community building, it has also led to lowered cost of doing business and increased Philippine industries' competitiveness especially for communications-based industries like IT, call centers, business process outsourcing, and others," FEF president Alex Magno said.

The FEF is a non-government group composed of analysts, economists and academicians.

VAT is an indirect tax of 10 percent slapped only on the value added by a company. While this burden creates a chain of accountability among taxpayers, there are loopholes that have led to huge tax leakages.

Telecom companies are amenable to increasing the rate by 2 percentage points to 12 percent. The finance department said that for several years, most telecom firms, including the profitable ones, have not paid a single cent of VAT.

However, the telecom firms said they had high-value purchases for their network expansion that were VAT deductible.

The FEF said the government should lift the exemptions on VAT, including those given to lawyers and the petroleum sector.

"Even without factoring in the effect of lifting exemptions, the increase in rate alone can raise revenues by P30 billion per year," Magno said.

He said with the coming legislation of the "sin" tax bill or the adjustment of excise taxes on beer and tobacco, the government was closer to achieving its P80-billion target.

Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. had said it was not opposed to new taxes and was open to paying more to help the government raise an additional P10 billion in revenue.

Globe Telecom Inc. senior vice president Rodolfo Salalima said the P10 billion in additional taxes the Arroyo administration wanted to generate from the sector could be achieved even under the existing tax regime.

PLDT and its subsidiaries were expecting to shell out more than P31 billion in taxes this year and next, according to PLDT chair Manuel Pangilinan.

Pangilinan said the most equitable solution to address the deficit problem would be to increase the value-added tax rate. A franchise tax or any other impost to be slapped on gross earnings would hit even the phone companies that were losing.

Salalima said that apart from PLDT and Globe, the rest of the members of the telecom industry had been in the red.

"Increasing the VAT would make sure that the entire food chain is taxed. It would force us, our suppliers and the rest of the chain to declare the correct income. These guys make money also so they should be taxed," Pangilinan said.

SEC affirms decision on UCC

THE SECURITIES and Exchange Commission (SEC) affirmed an earlier decision saying that the holding company that bought into Union Cement Corp. did not have to buy the stakes of the cement firm's minority shareholders.

The decision was made by the SEC corporate finance department and affirmed by the Commission en Banc, an SEC official said. To justify its position, the CFD said the sale was not covered by the tender offer rule since it was not made directly but through a holding company.

However, National Life, a minority shareholder of Union Cement, has filed a motion for reconsideration with the SEC and sought the reversal of the CFD's decision. The SEC in turn has referred the motion to its legal unit, the Office of the General Counsel.

Holding firm Bancor Consolidated Industries Inc. (BCII), the flagship company of the Phinma Group, sold its 21.3-percent share in Union Cement Holdings Corp. (UCHC).

Atlas Cement Corp., a 53-percent subsidiary of BCII, also approved the sale of its 29.69-percent stake in Union Cement early this year.

The total transaction was valued at $214 million, involving $89 million for the direct holdings of BCII and $125 million for Atlas' shareholdings.

The shares were sold to Cemco Holdings Inc., a local partner of BCII.

"UCHC is one of the major shareholders of Union Cement Corp., one of the leading cement companies in the country."

"Our exit from UCC is a constructive decision," an official of BCII had said. The company's board said in a statement that "it considered the price fair and attractive" and that it was able to find parties that have the necessary combination of technology, market reach, supply reach and capital resources to make the cement company globally competitive and to maintain its leadership locally.

BIR urged to tap LTO's help in tax collection campaign

THE LAND Transportation Office can help the Bureau of Internal Revenue raise as much as P88 billion in additional revenue yearly, according to Negros Oriental Rep. Hermunio Teves.

He said in a statement that the LTO could require the submission of proofs of tax payments by vehicle owners before approving applications for vehicle registration.

"If there is just close coordination between the LTO and the BIR, the potential additional income tax from individuals can reach as much as P88 billion," Teves noted. He, however, did not elaborate how the figure was arrived at.

Teves said almost 3.2 million vehicles were registered with LTO in 2003, while only about 690,000 families filed their income tax returns in the same year.

"An individual who does not pay an income tax cannot possibly afford to buy or own a car," he said.

"There is no car, even second-hand, that can be bought for less than P200,000, which is the minimum taxable income that should pay P37,000 in personal income tax," explained Teves.

He said the government must find ways to enhance tax collection to avoid introducing new taxes.

"The executive branch must also ensure that existing tax laws are efficiently and effectively implemented to optimize its revenue collections," Teves noted.

Of the eight revenue measures proposed by the Arroyo administration to raise an additional P80 billion in revenue yearly, only the adjustment in the excise taxes on beer and tobacco might be approved before the end of this year.

Tighter disclosure rules pushed

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

THE PHILIPPINE Stock Exchange (PSE) market integrity board is proposing that the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) tighten disclosure rules as an additional safeguard for the investing public.

The MIB, chaired by retired Supreme Court Senior Associate Justice Jose Vitug, was recently put to the test to review a probe done by the PSE's policing unit on Metro Pacific Corp. for alleged insider trading.

Some brokers had alleged insider trading for failure on the part of First Pacific Co. to disclose its plan to sell a 5-percent stake in subsidiary MPC.

The MIB recently cleared MPC and FPC of insider trading. It ruled, however, that this particular case of alleged insider trading could not be divorced from the disclosure rules under the Securities Regulation Code. Citing the SRC, the MIB said that "what the SRC requires to be disclosed is change in ownership, not a planned or intended change in ownership. The language of the provision would indicate that the obligation to disclose arises after the sale, not before the sale."

Therefore, "FPC (First Pacific Co. Ltd.) is not required by law to disclose its plan to sell MPC's 5-percent outstanding capital stock before effecting the same."

"The fact that no such requirement is prescribed by the law inevitably means that such stockholder can dispose of its shares prior to disclosure without running afoul with our insider trading law," the MIB said in a resolution. The MIB also said that in a pre-sale disclosure, for example, "it is possible for the planned or intended sale not to materialize" and in such case, those who sold at a lower price may suffer damages.

In a post-sale disclosure, "investors who bought prior to the disclosure, as in this case, may suffer damages when the share price goes down after the disclosure of the sale by a substantial or controlling shareholder is made."

MIB noted that the fact that the law "requires that disclosure be made after change of ownership is a clear indication that legislators made a policy choice in favor of post-sale disclosure."

"This board cannot second-guess this policy choice made by Congress," MIB noted, adding that the law did not prohibit a controlling shareholder from making a disclosure ahead of the required 10-day period. The MIB said that FPC "would have been well advised to make an early disclosure so that the matter would not have escalated to this level."

Most importantly, the MIB noted that "the 10-day period is a minimum requirement to protect the investing public." There "is nothing to prohibit a rule prescribing a much shorter disclosure period if, in the judgment of both the SEC and the PSE, an earlier disclosure will further protect the investing public."

The current PSE rules have a shorter period but it covers only directors and officers and not controlling shareholders like FPC. The MIB recommended to the SEC that it shorten the 10-day period.

was pushing for more investments in the manufacturing and services sectors.

"While we aggressively promote investments in infrastructure to improve the business environment, the manufacturing and services sectors provide the jobs for our workforce and produce the goods for consumption," Purisima said.

In the first 10 months, committed projects in manufacturing and services reached P49 billion or 45 percent higher than the Farm sector seen to post 5% growth this year

By Christine A. Gaylican

THE AGRICULTURE sector is expected to post a 5 percent growth this year despite the damages inflicted by the four typhoons that hit the country.

Agriculture Secretary Arthur C. Yap said growth in the past three quarters had to be credited for the expected increase in farm output for the whole year. The sector posted growth of not lower than 6 percent in the first three quarters of the year.

"We were actually looking at a 5.85-percent growth but this will possibly drop to 5.11 percent due to the typhoons," Yap said.

Agriculture production is being closely watched by the country's economists as it makes up about a fifth of the country's total economic output.

The government, according to Yap, can help farmers recover their losses through the immediate distribution of seeds and other farming inputs. This, however, was estimated to cost the government at least P35 million.

GMA Rice Program director Frisco Malabanan said paddy harvest this year could reach 14.3 million metric tons. This, however, was lower than the target of 14.5 million metric tons this year.

"There is still a chance to increase our output since early interventions have already been made," Yap said.

Recent developments, he added, could offer agriculturists in the provinces the opportunity to assess their current programs and pursue diversification plans. Agriculturists can help determine the areas where different provinces enjoy competitive edge.

Scientists cited for stance on new farm technology

AGRICULTURE research firm Monsanto recently cited the strong stand taken by the Philippine scientific community in support of the use of modern technologies to improve food production and battle hunger.

Monsanto Philippines government and public affairs director Noel Borlongan said the position of the Filipino scientists "is an assurance that the country is serious in its bid to address the issues of poverty and dwindling farm productivity."

Leading Filipino scientists earlier formed a solid phalanx behind the government's policy adopting agriculture biotechnology as the foundation for its bid to increase the production of staple food crops. The scientists also rapped attempts by foreign groups to "wage a scare campaign among Filipino farmers to prevent them from shifting to biotechnology-processed plant varieties."

Borlongan particularly cited the assurance made by former University of the Philippines president Emil Q. Javier that there was no scientific basis to conclude that genetically modified organisms could harm people and certain plant types.

"GMOs are safe with government agencies undertaking strict screening of these plant varieties before they are commercially produced," Javier said.

Scientists believe that the adoption of modern technology could also reduce the country's dependence on imported food and feeds.

Citibank is Asia's Preferred Bank

FOR OVER 100 years, Citibank has been in service in the Philippines. It is considered the country's largest foreign bank. Recently, it was voted the Most Preferred Bank—the best international brand in the bank/insurance/investment service category—in the first annual Asia's Top 1,000 Brand Listing.

Global market research Synovate, organizers of Superbrands Asia, Asian Media, conducted a proprietary survey of Asia's most preferred brands with 7,500 individual consumers aged 15-64, across eight Asian markets, including 1,000 in mainland China, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, Taiwan and Thailand, and 500 consumers in the Philippines.

Interviewees were asked to name the best international brand across nine major product and service categories; with "best" meaning the brand that is most trusted by the consumers or the one they consider as having the best reputation in the category. Categories included financial services, alcohol, automotive, consumer electronics, luxury goods, services, personal quality goods, other personal products and consumer goods.

The results were weighted according to the population in each market, providing a representative cross-section of society. Citibank ranked first in the bank/insurance/investment service category and 27th among the 1,000 Asian most preferred brands.

Nina Aguas, Citibank Philippines' Country Business Manager for Global Consumer Group said: "We are honored to be voted as Asia's most preferred bank. This recognition encourages us to continue to innovate and provide world-class products and banking services to our many clients."

In Consumer Banking, Citibank offers a range of credit card products including co-branded cards with industry leaders and premier banking services such as CitiGold Wealth Management and Citibanking.

Citibank is a trusted brand in the market. It is because of its winning combination of talented and dedicated people, a slew of innovative products, impeccable services and an overwhelming drive to be the best. Plus knowing their market to heart.

These qualities have helped earn Citibank the enviable distinction of being the industry innovator in card products and services.

Citibank ushers early holiday cheer for 10 lucky cardholders

IN THIS time when almost everyone has to scrimp on their holiday budget, 10 Citibank cardholders received the most exciting gifts just in time for Christmas. The Citibank Preferred Brands promotion gave away P3.6 million in prizes during the first draw early this month.

The winners have their own varied interesting stories much like the prizes given away.

A digital camera served as the winning ticket to a Mercedes-Benz C180 Kompressor Saloon for Lizbeth Laura Del Rosario of Quezon City. Interestingly, Lizbeth and husband Rod had just bought a new car. But who can resist a Mercedes?

"I never imagined I would win, and a Mercedes-Benz at that," says Lizbeth. She bought a digital camera using her Citibank Gold MasterCard at Avid, which as a Citibank partner merchant for the promotion automatically doubled her raffle entries.

Lizbeth enjoys having a Citibank card. She said: "Citibank credit cards are accepted everywhere and I like that a lot. Plus, Citibank offers a generous credit limit."

Surprisingly, the prizes were fitted into the winners. Citibank Gold Visa cardholder and businessman Napoleon Ong won a Fujitsu Lifebook S6220 worth P130,000.

Reynaldo Cruz, a Citibank Gold Visa holder, is a businessman who also enjoys driving. So the Shell fuel cards amounting to P100,000 he won would give him more reasons to drive his V6 Thunderbird. "I'm happy to win something that's so practical in value."

A Sony 43-inch Projection TV would not only delight kids but movie buffs as well. Citibank Gold MasterCard cardholder and businesswoman Melorie Militante will surely have a grand time watching her favorite movies.

"My three children will definitely love it as they can watch their favorite programs and play their video games. All I can say is thank you Citibank," says Melorie.

Another businesswoman who often uses her Citibank Gold MasterCard won a Canon Powershot Pro1 Digital Camera with Canon Pixma IP6000D Photo Printer. Said Elizabeth Yuchoco: "This is a wonderful prize! Now I can conveniently take pictures of my kids and print the photos at my convenience."

As for winning against many odds, Timothy Lee Ng is a prime example - he only needed one raffle entry to bag a trip for two to Hong Kong via Cathay Pacific. The lucky winner uses a Citibank Classic Visa card.

"This is my first time to win in a raffle so it's unexpected but very welcome," says Timothy who intends to bring his wife with him. "I'm glad that my first overseas trip will come free and courtesy of my favorite credit card."

His Citibank Gold MasterCard earned businessman Charles Chua a Panasonic Home Theater System.

"As soon as I heard I won, I walked around the house trying to find a place for it. I've already allocated a space and I can't wait to install it in my room," he said.

WINNERS ALL - Citibank cardholders Melorie Militante, Reynaldo Cruz, Lizbeth Laura Del Rosario, Elizabeth Yuchoco and Napoleon Ong bagged major prizes during the first draw of the Citibank Preferred Brands Promotion.

Congratulations to the brand new owners of these preferred brands!

Share a Load this Christmas, win loads of G-Cash from Globe

CHRISTMAS is a time for sharing - of gifts, heartfelt greetings, or even a simple thing as cellphone reloads. This holiday season, Globe and Touch Mobile subscribers can celebrate that Christmas spirit with the Share-a-load promo. Globe's revolutionary Share-a-Load service now gives subscribers a chance to win G-Cash simply by sharing load with loved ones or friends.

G-Cash is a breakthrough service that transforms a Globe or Touch Mobile subscriber's cellphone into a mobile wallet, allowing subscribers to send and receive cash values, send remittances, and pay for purchases simply through a text message. The Share-a-Load service, on the other hand, allows subscribers to transfer prepaid load from one mobile phone user to another.

From Dec. 9, to Jan. 5, Globe and Touch Mobile prepaid or postpaid subscribers can register in the Share-A-Load Christmas promo for free. Simply text REG SALXMAS and send to 2854. You can then spread holiday cheer by sharing load with other Globe or Touch Mobile prepaid subscribers. Every time you send load to friends and loved ones, you get a chance to win up to 150

G-Cash daily or as much as 10,000 G-Cash in the grand raffle draw.

There are two ways to win: on each day of the promo period, every 10th subscriber who is registered to the promo and who sends at least P25 load via Share-a-Load instantly wins 50 G-Cash. You can win up to three times a day for a total of 150 G-Cash. Also, every registered user who sends any amount of load through Share-a-Load during the promo period is entitled to win 10,000 G-Cash in the grand raffle. 50 lucky winners will be drawn on Jan. 7. The G-Cash credits you win can be used to pay for purchases at selected stores like Mercury Drug, National Bookstore, Metro Gaisano, Ortigas Home Depot, Shakey's, and Burger King; movie tickets at Ayala SureSeats cinemas; food deliveries from Jollibee (8-7000) Shakey's (533-8000), Max's Restaurant (7-9000), and even to send baon (in the form of G-Cash) to your loved ones. They can also easily be converted into actual cash.

To transfer credits through Share-a-Load, simply text <Load amount> and send to 2+ the 10-digit mobile phone number of the person to whom you wish to send load. First-time users of the Share-a-Load service will first have to register by typing REG  <your mother's maiden name> and sending this message to 2916. You will use your PIN in subsequent transactions using the Share-a-Load service. The next time you want to transfer load to a friend, simply text <Load amount> <PIN> and send this to 2+ your friend's 10-digit mobile phone number.

If you've run out of load and want to ask for load from a friend, you can use Ask-a-Load, another innovation from Globe HandypHONE. Just text <Load amount> and send to 26 + your friend's 10-digit mobile phone number. Your friend can conveniently accept your request by replying with "YES" (for first-time Share-a-Load users) or with their existing Share-a-Load pin. Both users will receive text advisories confirming the transfer of credits. Both prepaid and postpaid subscribers can send load through Share-a-Load and Ask-a-Load.

The more you use the Share-a-Load service, the more chances you have of winning lots of G-Cash. Share-a-Load now and have a merry Christmas with Globe!

Alliance Software posts record growth

ALLIANCE Software, a Philippine-based international business software company, announces a record 50 percent growth in revenue YTD (Year-to-Date). Primarily attributed to aggressive advertising efforts, Alliance Software products such as the POS (Point-of-Sale) System were launched in December 2003 and have seen robust sales since then.

Traditionally a software outsourcing partner of Japanese firms, Alliance turned to Campaigns Cebu, a Total Marketing Solutions agency, for marketing communications support for the Philippine launch of their software packages. The resulting ad campaigns were hung on regular placements in national newspapers, strategic use of color and ad measurements as well as clear consumer insights.

The overwhelmingly positive market response to Campaigns Cebu's successful product and brand campaigns for Alliance have led to a surprisingly sharp increase in demand. Alliance Software president Robert Cheng says, "With Campaigns Cebu's support, Alliance can now intensify its efforts to penetrate deeper into the national market." With Campaigns Cebu's continuing role as its Total Marketing Solutions partner, Alliance Software looks forward to continuing its current growth trend with the upcoming campaign for its IT consultancy service, Alliance Professional Services. Alliance Professional Services or APS is the logical extension of the software firm's onsite servicing policy and is an effort to add additional value for Alliance clients.

REVISED OUTLOOK

Bush predicts steady economy, lower job growth

WASHINGTON—The administration of President George W. Bush, after being ridiculed by Democrats for an overly optimistic jobs forecast this year, on Friday significantly reduced its forecast for new jobs that will be created in 2005. It slightly boosted its estimate for overall economic growth.

In its new economic outlook, the administration predicted the economy will grow by 3.5 percent next year and will create an additional 2.1 million jobs.

A year ago, the administration was forecasting 3.6 million jobs would be created in 2005 after 2.6 million this year.

Democrats called the forecast for 2004 overly optimistic, an assertion that proved to be accurate. Through November, just 1.3 million jobs were created, half of the administration's forecast.

The economy has struggled to create new jobs during the recovery from the 2001 recession. Businesses have been successful in boosting production with fewer workers.

A problem facing the administration with its 2004 forecast was that it was prepared in late November 2003 as part of the administration's budget preparations but not released until early February when the budget was sent to Congress.

In between, the jobs picture darkened significantly with a string of weak monthly figures, thus making the administration's forecast look even more optimistic.

Gregory Mankiw, the chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, told reporters the administration had decided to release the 2005 forecast in early December, when it was completed, rather than waiting for two months for it to be possibly overtaken by events.

Mankiw and other administration officials said the early release had nothing to do with speculation that Mankiw is planning on leaving his CEA post.

Other officials said Friday that if Mankiw does decide to leave, a leading candidate under consideration to replace him is Ben Bernanke, currently serving as one of seven members of the Federal Reserve board.

Bernanke has also been mentioned as a top prospect to replace Fed Chair Alan Greenspan, whose term ends in January 2006.

The administration said the overall economy as measured by the gross domestic product will grow by 3.5 percent next year and 3.4 percent in 2006.

A year ago, the administration was forecasting growth at slightly lower rates of 3.4 percent for 2005 and 3.3 percent for 2006.

For the current year, which is almost over, the administration now sees the economy expanding, when measured from the fourth quarter of last year, by 3.9 percent, down from an expectation of 4 percent this time a year ago.

On inflation, the administration predicted that consumer prices will rise by 2 percent next year, down sharply from an expected 3.4 percent increase this year.

Mankiw said the slowdown reflected the fact that energy prices are expected to be lower next year after jumping sharply in 2004.

Mankiw said the administration's forecasts for economic growth, employment and inflation were well within the range of private sector forecasts.

Private analysts generally agreed with that assessment.

"On job growth, they are just slightly more optimistic than I am and they are well within the bounds of possibility," said David Wyss, chief economist at Standard & Poor's in New York. AP

United pilot leaders accept 15% pay cuts

CHICAGO—Pilots at United Airlines face a 15-percent pay cut, their second double-digit wage reduction in two years, and will not further resist the company's elimination of traditional pensions under a tentative contract agreement made public Friday.

The pilots' union reluctantly approved the proposed five-year contract late Thursday, hoping to help lift the cash-strapped airline out of Chapter 11 bankruptcy in 2005 after more than two years of restructuring.

The contract sets an important precedent both for ongoing negotiations with other United unions and for rival airlines that also are slashing their labor costs to try to stem big losses.

Harshly concessionary, it reflects the realities of an airline industry crippled by soaring jet fuel costs and discount fare wars that have trimmed the profit from US tickets and sent so-called legacy airlines like United deeper into the red.

While agreeing to steep concessions that would save United $180 million (135.7 million euros) a year—$11 million less than the company's initial demand—the pilots would come away with some additional financial considerations in exchange for not waging a damaging fight to retain defined-benefit pensions.

The company, a unit of Elk Grove Village, Illinois-based UAL Corp., would make higher pension contributions than previously envisioned to the cheaper new defined-contribution pension plan. More notably, it would give the pilots' union $550 million in convertible notes that could then be distributed to the 6,400 pilots and sold in the capital market.

The cash would be intended to soften the blow of losing defined-benefit pensions for a group that would suffer disproportionately when that plan is eliminated. AP

A CONTAINER vessel is berthed at the Singapore Keppel terminal container port. Singapore's key non-oil domestic exports rose 16.5 percent in November from a year earlier but were down 9.1 percent on October, the government said Friday, in a further sign the city-state's economy is slowing.

Japan to cut GDP growth forecast for '04

TOKYO—Japan will slash its economic growth forecast in the current fiscal year to March 2005 to 2.1 percent from its earlier estimate of 3.5 percent, reflecting a slowdown in the world's second biggest economy, a report said Saturday.

Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi's Cabinet is set to approve the revised gross domestic product (GDP) forecast on Monday, the Mainichi Shimbun said, quoting government sources.

Apart from slowing economic activity, the downgrade is also due to a recent change in methods of calculating GDP, the daily said, adding Japan expects the economy to grow by 1.6 percent in the next fiscal year starting April 2005.

Japan's economy narrowly avoided recession this year after revised GDP in the July-September quarter grew a meager 0.1 percent following a 0.1-percent contraction in the April-June quarter.

Two consecutive quarters of negative economic growth technically constitute a recession. AFP

China aims for top 3 slot in car industry

BELING—Despite a less than stellar year in 2004, China aims to become the world's third-largest auto maker by the end of the decade, state media reported Saturday.

The objective is stated in a national blueprint for the auto sector, which aims to make it a pillar industry for the entire economy by 2010, the Xinhua news agency said.

The blueprint foresees the auto sector making up 5 percent of China's overall economy in six years' time, with export value of at least $50 billion, according to Xinhua.

In one example of Chinese carmakers' growing ambitions, the Shanghai Automotive Industry Corp. (SAIC) is in talks with England's MG Rover for a partnership that will offer it access to the European market.

SAIC, which has said it wants to become the world's sixth largest carmaker by 2010, is tipped to own 70 percent in the planned venture with MG Rover, the China Business Weekly newspaper said.

But with only two weeks to go before the New Year, China's auto industry is looking back at a rather painful 2004, Xinhua said in a separate report.

"Compared with other nations, China's auto sales were not at all low. Nevertheless, compared with the previous years in China, they were down," said car dealer Du Wen.

Authorities have predicted China's auto production and sales volume will surpass five million units by the end of the year.

While most countries would be ecstatic over such figures, in China they mark a significant drop.

In 2002, the first year after China joined the World Trade Organization, the sales volume of sedans reached 1.2 million, up 50 percent from 2001. AFP

Wall St. stocks to hold up

NEW YORK—US stocks should hold firm this week with little economic data or corporate news on tap to move the market going into the Christmas holiday, strategists said.

But nervousness will persist around drugmakers' shares after the hit they took Friday on a barrage of sour product news from sector heavyweights such as Dow component Pfizer Inc., and smaller rivals AstraZeneca and Eli Lilly & Co.

Pfizer's stock initially fell as much as up to 19 percent, before retracing close to half that loss by the end of trading, after it said it was ending cancer-prevention trials of its popular Celebrex arthritis drug.

The 30-stock Dow Jones industrial average rose 1.01 percent during the week.

The Standard & Poor's 500 Index gained 0.52 percent and the Nasdaq Composite index finished the week up 0.34 percent.

With just two weeks left before closing the books on 2004, the three major indexes are all in the black for the year.

The Dow is up 1.9 percent, the S&P 500 is up 7.4 percent and the Nasdaq is up about 7 percent.

Bitter pill

On what seemed like a Black Friday for drugmakers, Pfizer's warning coincided with news that Lilly would stamp a warning label for some patients who should not take its drug, Strattera, for attention deficit disorder.

Those setbacks were preceded by Anglo-Swedish group AstraZeneca's statement that its lung cancer drug Iressa, already launched in the United States and Japan, had failed to help patients live longer in a major clinical study.

Pharmaceutical stocks aside, equity strategists said that the general tone of the market would otherwise be stable in the absence of any notable market-moving economic data.

"There is confidence that the economy is on a self-sustaining expansion course and I don't think anything is going to happen to upset that expectations. The problem now is only stock-specific," said Michael Metz, chief investment strategist at Oppenheimer & Co.

"For those who thought that the worst was over for the drug industry and we had a good rally this week, they are now having second thoughts," Metz added.

For much of this year's second half, US stocks have been led by swings in oil prices and weakness in the dollar.

Over a barrel

Stanley Nabl, vice chair of Silvercrest Asset Management, said the market expects the price of a barrel of crude to stabilize between the high $30s and the mid-$40s over the next few months.

In November, the US Consumer Price Index rose 0.2 percent and core CPI, excluding volatile food and energy prices, also gained 0.2 percent—matching Wall Street's forecasts in each case. Overall, energy prices in November went up 0.2 percent, after soaring 4.2 percent in October.

This offered some relief to those concerned about inflation after the CPI's jump of 0.6 percent in October.

On Friday, NYMEX January crude rose $2.10 to settle at $46.28 a barrel.

The dollar slipped on Friday, trading at 104.17 yen, down 0.5 percent. The euro was at $1.3311, up 0.5 percent.

Light dusting of data

Snow is forecast for some parts of the US Northeast early next week. But on Wall Street's calendar, the outlook calls for only a light dusting of economic data and earnings reports.

The only economic figures to be announced this week are the November durable goods number, which reflects the demand for big-ticket items like cars, refrigerators, washing machines and other items produced by the manufacturing sector, and weekly jobless claims.

Economists expect November durable goods orders to rise 0.6 percent, compared with a drop of 1.1 percent in October.

The jobless claims for the week ending Dec. 18 are expected to rise to 330,000 from 317,000 last week. Both figures are due on Thursday, Dec. 23.

Investment banks Morgan Stanley and Bear Stearns Cos. Inc. lead a short list of earnings reports due.

Both are likely to have an impact on the market as investors eye their reports for an additional read on the strength of business on Wall Street. Reuters

World-class salespeople

RESEARCH consistently demonstrates that over half of those in professions selling lack the basic attributes required for success in this difficult profession - attributes that world-class salespeople possess as natural gifts or develop through training or single-minded focus. Of the remaining half, half of these again have the potential for success in some form of sales, but are currently selling the wrong product or service leaving just about 25 percent who sell about 80 percent of the world's products and services. That's why it is so key that all those of us with responsibility for driving our businesses forward have a keen understanding of the attributes that make for World-Class Salespeople - so that we can hire more of them. It's also key if we are to recognize where any struggling salespeople on our team might need training or support. Run all of your salespeople against this list of the ten attributes that world-class salespeople share in common: irrepressibly positive attitude; they understand that sales is a numbers game; they live to sell; totally sales driven, they are competitive; obsessed with "the next step"; they know that they and their products are world class; they qualify hard before they invest time and energy; they expect to hear "No!"; they sell through client knowledge. When you hire new salespeople look for these key attributes; and when you look at your current salespeople, especially those who are struggling, look for which of these attributes are missing - and invest time and money in whatever coaching, training and support they need to develop. Move all of your team into the 20 percent zone and watch your sales soar. Profiles Asia Pacific might be of service to your company. Jocelyn Reyes is executive director of Profiles Asia Pacific. Christmas gifts for a techno-freak

LAST year, Apple's iPod MP3 player was the hands-down winner of all the games and gadgets we reviewed. This year, we boil it down to three things techno-freaks at Infotech found nifty.

For a year, we have reviewed many consumer gadgets and toys, ranging from cellular phones to personal computers to digital cameras and dozens of video games.

Some of them were very expensive, some of them were reasonably priced. We tried to get the middle point by comparing features with the price, and factored in the total experience of using a digital consumer gadget. The result of that evaluation is what you see on this page now—three tech-related stuff techno-freaks would love to have for Christmas.

Let's start off with guns blazing.

In terms of the hype and excitement generated by any technology-related consumer product, we found the game "Halo 2" for the Microsoft Xbox gaming console to be at the top of the list. Halo 2 is by no means a perfect game, and has some disappointing areas as you will discover in the review below. But in the end the game proved to be worth all the accolades and the expectations it was subjected to.

And what would a year's review of gadgets be like if it didn't include a cellular phone in the list? Dozens of cellular phones were released this year, and it was really a tough choice. In the end, however, a fully loaded multimedia phone from Sony Ericsson outshone them all in terms of features, usability and price.

Finally, a gadget that really made our year is one of the top three in this list. Consumers are still confused about what kind of animal the RIM Blackberry really is. People call it a phone-PDA or a PDA-phone. We call it a complete a complete messaging device. It is an e-mail terminal, a text machine, a cellular phone and a personal digital assistant.

Read the reviews below and you'll find out why these three were our choices for the year.

Sony Ericsson K700i wins war

By Leo Magno

DOZENS of cellular phone models were introduced in 2004, and we were able to review many of them. These phones ranged from the low-end, voice and text bare essentials to the high-end, PDA-type of phones that cost as much as personal computers.

And so it goes without saying that it was difficult to choose from among the phones we reviewed which would be most recommendable as far as features, functionality and price are concerned. In the end we settled for a mid-range phone, one from Sony Ericsson.

The K700i topped them all when it came to balancing price with features. At P16,000, this phone is still expensive and barely makes it to the price of mid-range phones. But for that price you get features previously found only in high-end, PDA-type of phones.

This phone is a multimedia powerhouse.

Images and sounds are handled well, with a big, 176x220-pixel resolution color screen that is equal to the Nokia Series 60 devices. The TFT screen capable of 65,000 colors is big, bright and the operating system animation is cute. The 640x480 VGA camera has been enhanced to include a camcorder. The camera has a 4x digital zoom and a camera light ingeniously located at the back of the phone. In fact, when you turn the phone around it looks like a digital camera, and don't forget that Sony is one of the biggest digital camera producers in the world. Camera clarity is good and has a panorama mode that makes it stand out. This mode lets you take three overlapping photos that the phone auto-stitches together, giving you one very wide image. Other fun camera features include the frames, which allow you to add interesting comic-like backdrops to the image.

On the sound department, the phone has a good polyphonic system, MP3 player and built-in FM radio. It produces crisp audio and ring tones, with eight volume levels.

To handle all this multimedia audio and video, the phone has a respectable 41Mb of memory; this is huge for a mobile phone.

The downside to all this multimedia capability is battery consumption. The phone sucks up battery charge like a drunkard let loose in a bar after being in jail for a year. Realistic and real-world operating time for the phone—using full camera, phone and audio functions—is two-and-a-half days, although Sony Ericsson claims a talk time of eight hours and standby of 300 hours.

All in all, the K700i is loaded with features. It has a nice, sleek metallic look, and is very user-friendly. And all this for P16,000, at which price other phones don't even come fully packed.

'Halo 2' a great game, but ends with a whimper

By Joey G. Alarilla

HALO 2 is awesome. Halo 2 is a big letdown.

Sound schizophonic? If you've played and finished this much-awaited Xbox game (event actually, because it's broken all sorts of gaming industry records and has sold over five million copies so far), you know exactly what I mean. It's still a great game, no question about it, but the ending? Arghh!

I won't spoil the game for those who haven't played through Halo 2 yet, but let's just say you'll feel very strongly about the controversial cliffhanger ending. You're either going to like it and defend it as the ending Bungie planned all along, or you're going to cuss when you realize it's the ending and that's all the thanks you get for the 10 to 15 hours you've put in to finishing Halo 2. I'm firmly in the camp of people who think the ending's full of crap.

You know how you don't want some games to end even as you desperately try to finish them as quickly as possible, because you want to see the conclusion, move on to another title, or, I dunno, do other things in life? Well, I found myself saying, "Nah, this can't be the last stage, I mean, it can't end with me as... Oh good, I was right... see, I get to... WTF?!! (credits roll)."

And while I haven't beaten the game yet on Heroic or Legendary mode—Normal, OK?—from the violent reactions of many Halo 2 players, yup, this is the ending Bungie and Microsoft saddled us with for the single-player campaign. To be fair, I didn't like the "Half-Life 2" ending so much, either, but it was nothing compared to the disappointment I felt with the Halo 2 ending.

The thing is, however, that you have so much to love about Halo 2. The graphics, the sound, the gameplay—Halo 2 excels in all these areas and offers you a truly enjoyable experience. I was all pumped up the moment the game started and I was Master Chief again—the new improved Master Chief with better armor and a personal shield that regenerates more rapidly. I could feel the adrenaline rush as the Covenant fleet appeared ready to invade Earth. Heck, wasn't that what all the teasers were promising, that you'd be saving Earth? So, presumably, most of the action will take place on Earth? Hey, we saw the demo trailers, right? And that scene with Master Chief hitching a ride on a rocket? Hah!

Suffice it to say that you get to travel to a lot of other places in Halo 2. Plus you don't have to backtrack as much as you did in the original game. One thing I really find cool about Halo 2 is that you get to try different things with every level. Who says first-person shooters should just be endless levels of you running around with your bad-ass weapons? Here, it's crucial to man turrets, ride Warthogs, Banshees, Ghosts, Wraiths, and uh, other vehicles—play the game, I won't spoil the surprise.

Speaking of vehicles, one of the coolest features in Halo 2 is the ability to jack enemy vehicles. Yup, you can make believe it's "GTA: Halo." It's such a rush to board an enemy craft (using the X button when you're prompted once you get in position), start hammering away using the B button, then plant a bomb using the left trigger. Then you can drive the vehicle using the X button. Let me tell you, it feels great to fire at an enemy Wraith while riding a Ghost, close in, land and then try to jack the Wraith.

Another enhancement is the ability to use two weapons simultaneously via dual wielding. The first time I realized this could now be done in Halo 2, I felt like I was in a John Woo flick. It's been seamlessly introduced into the Halo 2 control scheme that you might find yourself wondering if this option was available all along in the first Halo (in case you're still thinking, it wasn't). I have my gripes about it, though, because if you're dual wielding and want to select your reserve weapon—say, you're walking around with a plasma pistol in one hand and a needler in the other, but now want to switch to your beam rifle—you have to drop one weapon first using X, then switch to the reserve weapon using Y. Plus I'm really used to lobbing grenades while I'm firing with a weapon, and obviously you can't do this while dual wielding. Still, it adds more options, apart from the fact that you have a breathtaking array of weapons you can now handle.

One of the best enhancements in the weapons department is that Master Chief can now wield the Covenant energy sword. That sword has saved my butt a number of times, particularly because now you also have the option of using it to target an enemy during melee and performing an instant kill (well, unless you're fighting heavy-duty bad-asses like the Hunters, who have been altered from their counterparts in the original Halo) by pulling the right trigger.

One of the best things about the original Halo was its plot—it was one of the rare occasions gamers actually cared about the story while playing an FPS. Halo 2 reveals

Blackberry 7230: E-mail in pocket

By Erwin Lemuel G. Oliva
Contributor

I AM sitting in front of my house watching my daughter Natasha learn to ride a bike, while I write this article. No, I'm not using a laptop as you might have suspected. I'm using a palm-sized (not to be confused with the Palm brand) device called a Blackberry.

The Blackberry was developed by Research In Motion (RIM) as a device for sending and receiving e-mail wirelessly. Newer models can also make phone calls, send text messages, and browse the Internet—all in a lightweight and slim design.

But any gadget is only as good as the software or applications that come with it. So I will take you through some of the major features of the Blackberry based on what I believe field telecommuters (such as journalists like myself) find useful.

First, let's focus on the e-mail features of the Blackberry (the 7230 model for this review). This is the key feature of the Blackberry and it does a good job of letting you send and receive e-mail while on the go.

But there are still some limitations. Office users who want access to their office e-mail directly need to be using either Microsoft Exchange or IBM Lotus Domino as their e-mail platform. If your office doesn't use these e-mail systems, you can still send or receive e-mail but you'll have to create an e-mail account with your mobile network provider (Smart Communications in this case).

However, Smart lets you access up to 10 regular POP e-mail accounts on your Blackberry by specifying them when you sign up for your e-mail account.

For this review, I used Smart's e-mail system to test the e-mail feature.

To create an e-mail account, I visited Smart's Blackberry website to activate the e-mail service. It is fairly easy to set it up. Once you're on the website, you are asked to supply a PIN (personal identification number) and your unit's unique International Mobile Equipment Identifier (IMEI) code.

You can find the IMEI and a default PIN under the Options menu and under a sub-menu labeled Status.

It took me five minutes to activate the e-mail account. After a few seconds, I received a welcome message from Smart saying that my e-mail account was ready for use.

I then started adding e-mail addresses into Blackberry's integrated phone and address book in order to start sending, er, spam to friends.

This part was a bit tedious since I had to familiarize myself with the built-in QWERTY keyboard. For quite some time, my right thumb had been doing the typing.

Now I had to train my left thumb.

Once my contacts were in, I started sending test messages. In a few minutes, I got replies.

By the way, the Blackberry uses the General Packet Radio Service or GPRS network to send your e-mail—which means you might find it hard to send or receive e-mail in areas where Smart's GPRS signal is weak.

The Blackberry can also open e-mail attachments in Microsoft Word, Powerpoint, as well as other formats, but it lacks a memory card expansion slot so you could run out of space for a lot of attachments.

Aside from e-mail, the Blackberry has other features like a calendar and a WAP browser for accessing stripped-down versions of websites, plus other PDA-type of software.

However, the Blackberry lacks a stylus, something I've gotten used to having in handhelds. It has no Bluetooth support either.

The unit also needs an automatic backlighting system to make it easier to type in low-light conditions, though the flipside of that is that the unit has great battery life—I didn't need to charge the unit for almost a week (I also got a tip from Pearl Santos of Smart that if you always keep the Blackberry in its holster, the battery life becomes longer).

Overall, the Blackberry 7230 can replace your phone and PDA if e-mail is the key application for you. Corporate users who don't use Exchange and Domino may have to go through the additional hassle of adding yet another e-mail address to their calling cards, but for some that's a small price to pay for on-the-go e-mail access.

more details about the Covenant and offers some surprising twists, but frankly the plot doesn't really deliver in this sequel. It's all tied in to the fact that you don't play exclusively as Master Chief. Yup, there's a second playable character, and you have to play him during certain stages. Now, it was cool at the start, but come on! I don't know about you, but when I play Halo 1 I want to be Master Chief. Forcing players to use the second character (yeah, yeah, 'coz it's "part of the plot") is really irritating and seems like a huge cop-out in light of the—there's that word again—ending. Repeat after me: "Bungie: I want to play as Master Chief."

The controversy surrounding the Halo 2 ending has even spawned a number of conspiracy theories. Some say that this is what Microsoft and Bungie planned all along because Halo 2.5 or heck, Halo 3, will be released early next year, or the true ending will be made available for download exclusively via Xbox Live. In fact, a gamer who finished Halo 2 on Legendary mode said on Xbox.com that a piece of text appears saying "February 9th, 2005," further reinforcing his belief that this is when the true final Halo 2 level will be made available on Xbox Live. Don't ask me; I haven't tried finishing it on Legendary yet.

Others are speculating that Bungie developed Halo 2 and Halo 3 simultaneously, like the last two films in The Matrix trilogy. Some say that parts of Halo 2 were removed and placed in Halo 3. I mean, there was that much hyped E3 demo, right, with all that action supposedly taking place on Earth? But Microsoft and Bungie have said that it was a demo and did not necessarily reflect any actual stage in Halo 2.

I guess that's really why some gamers feel disappointed, not because Halo 2 wasn't a great game, but because the perception is that Microsoft and Bungie somehow misled people. True, demos are different from the actual game and maybe something different had been planned originally, but the fact is right until launch people were hyped over the prospect of playing on Earth and defending it from the Covenant. The boys over at Microsoft and Bungie didn't dissuade anyone from believing that, and so a lot of bubbles got burst. And whether any of the conspiracy theories is true and Halo 3 will appear next year or as a launch title for Xenon (a.k.a. Xbox Two), it's cold comfort once you come face-to-face with the Halo 2 ending.

Sure, defenders say that the cliffhanger ending is just right since Halo 2 is the middle part of a trilogy and should be seen as the equivalent of "Star Wars: The Empire Strikes Back." I'm really not happy with the tale they spun for this sequel, however, and while I'm giving Bungie the benefit of the doubt, I just don't see how they'll pull off a great Halo 3 story considering the direction they set here. Oh, and do be sure to finish the closing credits (hey, they're fun, and you'll get a kick out of seeing the different celebrities who provided their voices talents even to grunts in the game, like Michael Rodriguez and Orlando Bloom) because there's an epilogue of sorts in the form of a cutscene involving someone very familiar.

So, yeah, maybe Bungie can pull it off. It's not like the game is the equivalent of "Star Wars: Episode Two—Attack of the Clones." But right now, the Halo trilogy is looking a lot less like Lord of the Rings—and more like The Matrix series.

Please Microsoft, Bungie, don't do that to Master Chief.

MASTER Chief has seen quite some action since the first Halo, and he's back for more.

Recipients of 2004 Aga Khan architecture awards announced

NEW DELHI, India—At the historical Humayun's Tomb, His Highness the Aga Khan, hereditary spiritual leader (Imam) of the Shia Ismaili Muslims and founder of the Aga Khan Development Network (AKDN) together with India's Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh recently announced the seven recipients of the 2004 Aga Khan Award for Architecture. The announcement marked the completion of the ninth cycle of the program. The Award, which has a triennial prize fund of $500,000, is the world's largest architectural award.

The seven projects selected by the 2004 Award Master Jury are: Bibliotheca Alexandrina, Alexandria, Egypt; Primary School, Gando, Burkina Faso; Sandbag Shelter Prototypes, various locations; Restoration of Al-Abbas Mosque, Asnaf, Yemen; Old City of Jerusalem Revitalization Programme, Jerusalem; B2 House, Ayvalik, Turkey; and Petronas Towers, Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

During his speech at the award ceremony, the Aga Khan remarked on the appropriateness of India as the venue for the event, given its rich cultural heritage and pluralistic traditions. "Here, many cultures have maintained their distinct identities while combining and co-operating to create something even greater the dynamic and vibrant India of the modern world. This is also a country where the struggle for social justice and improved quality of life has made tremendous strides over many decades through the continuous efforts of governments and civil society," he said.

The Aga Khan emphasized that the Award for Architecture was recognition of the work of architects and their clients, builders—large and small, governments, planners, international organizations, granting agencies, village organizations and individuals, all of whom were collectively responsible for the creation of a humane, and socially supportive built environment that was important to the quality of life of people.

Praising the Aga Khan for the work done in restoring historical monuments, the Prime Minister said this had been an instructive example in finding new and creative solutions to the age-old problem of allocating scarce resources in a developing country to the preservation of heritage. "I hope that more public-private partnerships can be evolved to maintain and restore the monuments of our ancestors, which often lie in neglected condition in our cities and towns," he said.

During the current cycle of the Award, 378 projects were presented for consideration, and 23 were reviewed on site by outside experts. An independent Master Jury selected seven Award recipients that are notable for having attained the highest international standards of architectural excellence, while reflecting the values of the primarily Muslim societies the projects are intended to Acknowledging that the Award had come a long way since its inception in 1977, the Aga Khan nonetheless expressed concern over numerous aspects that required further attention. Quality housing remains the most essential need for societies everywhere, both in rural and urban environments; industrial facilities and workplaces are not at a level of excellence that makes them exceptional; rapidly expanding urban centers throughout the world lack public parks and open urban spaces; problems of transport, congestion and pollution have too few solutions emerging; and the growth of slums, the consequence of the relentless forces of urbanization, has not been stopped or even slowed down, he elaborated.

"These issues are not exclusive to the Muslim world" ended the Aga Khan. "The non-Muslim world struggles equally with explosive population growth, poverty, environmental degradation, exodus from rural areas, globalization and the impact on cultural identity of new forms of media" he added.

Natural germ fighter now available

LAURICO Virgin Coconut Oil, containing lauric acid, a natural germ fighter, is now on sale at many drugstores.

Lauric acid is a medium chain fatty acid that treats and prevents a wide assortment of infections, ranging from flu to AIDS.

Makers of Laurico Virgin Coconut Oil said laboratory tests had shown that the MCF found in Laurico is effective in destroying viruses that cause influenza, measles, herpes and hepatitis C. It eradicates bacteria that cause ulcers, urinary tract infections, meningitis and gonorrhea.

The makers said it kills fungi and yeast that cause ringworm, candida and thrush. The MCF kills invading organisms without causing any harm to human tissues, they said.

Moving out of crisis

MAPPING THE FUTURE

Edvard L. Ferreira

THE PHILIPPINES has never run out of innovative ideas to move the country out of crisis and finally put the country back on track. Actually, we have more than enough ideas.

We, Filipinos, are very, very good at preparing plans and roadmaps toward sustainable and equitable progress. We have the IQ to move this country forward.

Unfortunately, however, we lack XQ which refers to execution or implementation.

One problem, I think, is that many honest, hard-working and well-educated members of the private sector refuse to serve the country because of the perception that the government is a snake pit that victimizes even the well-intentioned ones.

Another problem, I believe, is the lack of motivation of existing government personnel to excel in their respective positions.

I don't know why, but one reason might be the almost similar benefits being enjoyed by all government employees, whether outstanding performers or not.

Like in the private sector, the government must have the professionalism to reward good performers and get rid of the bad eggs, so that the whole basket of public servants will not be contaminated.

In short, the government must have the political will to retain the right people in the right positions and get rid of the wrong ones.

One other problem, I guess, is "too much" democracy. The type of democracy that we are enjoying is actually doing us more harm than good.

I am not an expert on this, but I think a "responsible" democracy will enable our country to move forward at an accelerated pace. I am not saying that what we need is a dictatorship. But we need the political will of a dictator at this time.

"What I did promise was that my term would be the irreversible trend."—President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo.

This quote captures the essence of the first of a series of books to be printed by the Philippine Information Agency to chronicle the Arroyo Administration's policy statements and pronouncements.

The first book entitled "Mandate for Change," which focused on the President's 10-Point Legacy Program, is a good tool to educate and enlighten the public on how every individual can contribute to economic progress and become more deeply involved in nation building.

In her inaugural address as the 14th President of the Republic of the Philippines, President Arroyo stressed that "Our unity as a people will be defined by a strong vision for the nation built on common values of hard work, shared sacrifice and love of country. To achieve a united country, we need to squarely face the deep divisions of our nation. Not only the truth but also the solution. That solution must engage all segments of society in a new government of political reform and economic change."

What can we, in the business community, do then to help the Arroyo Administration achieve its 10-point program?

I believe that the members of the business community should help the government foster an entrepreneurial spirit among Filipinos to jumpstart our lagging economy.

The 10-point program of the government has prioritized the three-fold increase in the lending to micro, small and medium enterprises, which will create more employment opportunities and will certainly pump-prime the economy.

As I pointed out in my previous article, the Arroyo administration has to face this year a fiscal deficit of P312 billion (which is equivalent to 7 percent of the country's Gross Domestic Product or GDP) and a public sector debt of P5.3 trillion (which translates to 137 percent of GDP).

The budget deficit is certainly the country's most pressing problem. With the gargantuan task of addressing this chronic problem, the Arroyo administration needs the cooperation of all sectors of society to create a fiscally stronger government that can create a positive environment that shall be conducive to business growth with greater security, better infrastructure, cheaper credit and more expansions in terms of operations, assistance, job generation, particularly in SME growth and overall entrepreneurship.

Even if the government will do everything right, it cannot improve the economy alone. It will need the support of the business sector, which must do its share. Business, being the engine of the economy, must therefore work in harmony with the government.

We businessmen cannot afford to remain sitting down and just wait for good things to happen. We must do our humble share in moving our country out of crisis.

More important, we must, as a nation, collectively ensure that these dire developments does not happen again—especially for the sake of our children, and children's children.

YOU'RE PUTTING YOUR PRINTER AT RISK!

More than poor quality printouts, using refills, fake ink cartridges, and compatibles for your Canon printer can literally take its life.

Using refills, fakes and compatibles void your printer's warranty.

Refills refer to the ink used to "refill" Canon cartridges. While ink cartridges that illegally use the Canon brand are called fake. On the other hand, compatibles are other brands of ink cartridges used in a Canon printer. Experts consider all three kinds of ink cartridges hazardous and may be the main cause of breakdown of Canon printers.

So if you think you're saving money by purchasing refills, fake ink cartridges, and compatibles, think again. You'll pay dearly with costly repairs and sacrifice the life of your printer itself.

To be sure that you got genuine Canon Inks, use the Canon Handy Viewer to look at the Canon Security Sticker—the left hole should be black, while the right hole should contain the Canon logo.

funding that would effectively double any contributions from the private sector.

He notes the bulk of the Unicef funds in the country were being allocated to early childhood care and putting in child-friendly programs in schools especially in Mindanao, Manila, Cebu, Quezon City and Pasay.

The two programs, he says, were meant to arm preschool kids with the skills before they actually start school.

Unicef is using donations plus its own funds to put up libraries, give away educational toys, train teachers, and install clean toilets and even clean water in poor communities.

Iren and Nikos flew together with Seair crew Joseph Bustamante, Christian Kerr, Ferdinand Yco, aircraft mechanic Paulo Palalila and flight attendant Lovenen Burcer.

The group had flown and landed in several points in Asia and Europe, including Iren's hometown by Lake of Constance, located on the borders of Switzerland, Germany and Austria.

Iren started Seair with three planes. These are aircraft that he originally meant to service routes in Thailand but some twist of fortune brought him and Nikos to Palawan in the Philippines.

Iren says he fell in love with Palawan that he tried to buy a resort the next day. After that, he decided to operate the planes in the Philippines.

Seair now has nine aircraft and 200 employees. The company is gearing for an expansion next year that includes the lease of two more airplanes and flight to new routes.

Adding a twist to a former American Santa Claus project

By Vincent Cabreza
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

BAGUIO CITY—Indigent children in this city always looked forward to the imported American apples and chocolates that went into their goody bags every Christmas, back when the United States military ran Camp John Hay.

Caucasian Santas used to visit interior Baguio villages every December, when the former Camp John Hay Air Station activated Share-A-Joy, a benefit program devoted to poor Baguio children.

Camp John Hay's current custodian, the Camp John Hay Development Corp. (CJHDevco), is continuing this tradition. But some of the firm's Baguio-based officials are taking the Share-A-Joy goody bag into uncharted territories.

Months before Christmas, CJHDevco piloted a "healing camp" inside the Camp John Hay forest areas, where child rights advocates of Ebgan Inc. and psychologists of the Child and Family Services Philippines Inc. (CFSP) brought 80 abused children for a different counseling environment.

ALQUIROS dressed in his jolly red suit

The clinical results of this special summer camp were positive.

"Children responded well to counseling when they were exposed to nature and we are enlightened by this results. This means Share-A-Joy could offer children something more meaningful than just providing them American chocolates," says Adam Borja, one of the program's coordinators.

It is also the direction CJHDevco wants to take Share-A-Joy, a program started by Col. John Hightower, the Camp John Hay Air Station base commander in 1978, said Fredencio Alquiros, Share-A-Joy Foundation chair.

Hightower and members of Baguio's business community organized base firemen, John Hay marine and air force security personnel and other US military officials into a "Santa crew," Alquiros says.

Each of the US officials wore Santa Claus outfits. Many entered the city's villages aboard the base's shiny red fire trucks.

"Children's ears were perked up when they hear the fire truck bells ringing by December. They always anticipated the trucks because it carried American PX," Alquiros says.

Most of the base's beneficiaries came from villages surrounding Camp John Hay, but towards 1991, when the US bases finally pulled out of the Philippines, the Americans were slowly farming out Christmas bags to poorer Baguio villages.

That has become another American legacy to a city built by the United States colonial government in 1909, Alquiros says.

"But it spoiled Baguio. The city was always the beneficiary of things American. Kids always had the Christmas 'staple of apples and chocolates, because we were near the base,' Borja says.

"Of course nowadays, apples and chocolates are very accessible, and that had reduced the luster of Share-A-Joy (after the Americans left us)," Alquiros says.

There are moments when CJHDevco personnel links the US pullout to the hostility CJHDevco receives from some Baguio sectors when it won the lease to convert the former US facility into a multimillion-peso tourism estate, he says.

Alquiros is chief operating officer of the Camp John Hay Hotels Inc.

When the Philippine Tourism Authority was tasked to manage Camp John Hay in 1991, "Share-A-Joy" was touted as the government's premier social development project here.

Silverio de la Cruz, the government-appointed Camp John Hay general manager at the time, convinced Baguio businessmen like Avmar Pangilinan, Metrobank vice president; restaurateur Miguel Anton, civic leader Julie Cabato; Judge Edilberto Claravall, and Teresa de Guzman, general manager of the Baguio Water District, to form the Share-A-Joy Foundation on Oct. 9, 1998.

"Communities were still looking forward to a white Santa granting them gifts and that was difficult for a government-led program with its meager resources," Borja says.

In 2003, Share-A-Joy was operating on no more than a P60,000 budget, he said. When CJHDevco took over the project, it promptly raised P300,000 from benefit shows such as the recent Cecille Licad concert.

But Alquiros says Share-A-Joy needed to regain its community relevance by exploring a new project agenda that is "out of the box."

The summer camp for abused children gave Share-A-Joy its first strong "career shift," says Borja.

"We can now operate year round by offering Camp John Hay's forests and camping grounds to various child counseling projects," he says.

It also ushers in a new rationale for a proposed Camp John Hay Share-A-Joy Foundation that would be spun out of the project by 2005, Borja says.

The new foundation would explore environmental issues, health care projects and social development programs that will affect Baguio children, he says.

Celebrating Manila

There is more to the city than ugly malls
this Christmas

STOP mallng. Give yourself a Christmas treat by experiencing the city. See it in a new light and enjoy its hidden surprises.

Discover that, under its gruff and grimy cover, Manila hides places of charm that offer a special quality of life. All it takes is an adventurous spirit and a bit of time to experience some of these places I would like to share with you as a holiday offering.

Discover the wealth of textures in Manila. Buy a copy of "Street Bound: Manila on Foot" by Josefina Manahan (Anvil Books, 2001). Follow her clearly mapped-out routes and detailed instructions. Do any of the 22 walking tours in the book to experience the secrets of Manila that wait to surprise you.

Nearing Manahan tells you where to go. Some places are Binondo; Blumentritt in San Juan; Carimor in Pasay; the Kamuning Market, or the row of antique and curio shops on A. Mabini and M. H. del Pilar Streets in Ermita.

Let the book take you around the central Manila triangle by the Pasig, where the Metropolitan Theater, Arroceros Forest Park and the Mehan Garden are neighbors all fighting for survival.

From there, go north, cross the river to Quiapo and end your wandering at the all-steel San Sebastian Church.

Another route from the Mehan Garden area goes southward, crossing Taft Avenue toward the National Museum Complex, Intramuros, Rizal Park, and the Manila Bay sunset. For each recommended location, she maps out short walks; meticulously points out what to see, buy, or eat; and the curiosities to gawk at.

Celdran's Manila tours

If you prefer to be guided through Manila, Carlos Celdran is the person to do it for you. He conducts lively walking tours around the older districts of Manila. His walks wander off main streets, take detours that poke around fascinating back roads and alleys around Escolta, Intramuros, Quiapo, Chinatown, and other inner city places.

Carlos' humor can be called irreverent, but he does give new life and interest to mothballed, stuffy urban heritage. Old buildings and historic districts take on a fascinating new dimension with him. Celdran's strong

HELPING PEOPLE LIVE BETTER LIVES.

REGINE Velasquez has had a long-standing friendship with ace lensman Jun de Leon.

VELASQUEZ in various stages of glamorous dishabille

Regine Velasquez and Jun de Leon in book collaboration

THE VIVA Foundation for the Arts formally launched the book "Reigne" recently with the opening of the exhibit of photographs of singer Regine Velasquez taken by ace lensman Jun de Leon at The Podium.

"Reigne" is a collaborative effort between Velasquez and De Leon. The 200-page collection of photographs, many of which have never been seen before, covers five years in the life of the famous singer.

De Leon chronicled not only Regine's formal sittings for album covers or show posters but also many of her unguarded and daring moments, alone or with close friends.

"Reigne" retails at P950. It comes in a special gift box with a free CD of Velasquez singing "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face" and the never-before-released "Misty Glass Window."

"Reigne" brings to fore a long-standing friendship between two volatile artists who are also known perfectionists.

The two instantly hit it off the first time he accepted the offer to take her photographs for one of her album covers. Since then, she has relied on De Leon for her photo requirements.

In return, she has become one of his valued subjects for whom he would go the extra mile to get that special image.

Velasquez is one of the country's most popular stars. She was honored last week with a Platinum Record Award for the album "Covers." She stars on the soap series "Forever in My Heart" for GMA 7 and scored another big success with her recent concert "Reigning Still" at the Araneta Coliseum.

JUN DE LEON, lensman for the "Songbird"

De Leon has been a photographer for over 30 years. He has published five books of his works, among them "Viva Gold." He has also ventured into the movies with the short film "Waves of Echo."

MAG:NET Gallery is holding its annual "Xmas Show" at its Katipunan branch (Agcor Bldg., 335 Katipunan Ave., Loyola Heights, Quezon City).

The "Xmas Show" started last year. The connecting work between the first and second "Xmas Shows" is Gerry Tan's "TV Parol," a video installation displaying the image of a parol (Philippine Christmas lantern) encased in the confines of a television frame, a work that may well deconstruct popular perceptions of the holiday season as largely constructs of industry, myth and media in its references to the local giant broadcasting network's daily news show.

Roberto Chabet, meanwhile, will appropriate two seemingly disparate gallery components at opposite ends of the gallery: the Poet's Alcove and the toilet.

The Poet's Alcove is a white-washed niche designed as an exhibition space for literary works—poems, musings, stories and the like—positioned just beside the gallery entrance. The toilet, obviously, is a utilitarian space reserved for the most universal of functions.

Other works on display are by Ronald Achacoso, Mishka Adams, Augusto Albor, Juan Alcazaren, Poklong Aneding, Bert Antonio, Alfredo Aquiluzan, Amy Aragon, Felix Bacolor, Arge Bandoy, Reb Belleza, Pablo Biglangawa, Benjie Cabangas, Norberto Caracing, Lena Cobangbang, Louie Cordero, Aba Delena, Antonio Daroy, Joy Dayrit, Pardo de Leon, Neil Dorjicon, Rock Drilon, Jed Escudeta, Patricia Eustaquio, James Haresco, Nilo Ilarde, Geraldine Javier, Romeo Lee, Andy Maluche, Luis Dinda Martinez, Lui Medina, Fernando Mostedo, Manuel Ocampo, Jonathan Olazo, Jayson Oliveria, Bernardo Pacquing, Gar-

Ross Pastrana, Tony Perez, Dan Raralio, Didit Robillo, Carlo Saavedra, Juni Salvador, Popo San Pascual, Brocio Santos, Jojo Serrano, Yassin Sison, Maria Taniguchi, Jay Tice, Wire Tuszon, Trek Valdezano, Conrado Velasco, Roy Veneracion, Alvin Villaruel, Nestor Vinkuan, MM Yu and Rex Yuson.

Sculptors in this group include Dalena and ceramic artists Pete Jimenez, Hadrian Mendoza and Monique Ignacio.

Meanwhile, Sandra Palomar and Trek Valdezno are holding "Terrain Games" at Mag:net Gallery in Makati (Paseo Center, Paseo de Roxas corner and Saicedo Street).

Deriving its title from a West Point military handbook on map-reading techniques, "Terrain Games" exhibits new takes against conventional and traditional forms of exhibiting and displaying collaborative artworks, modifying the terrain, so to speak, normally expected from Philippine contemporary abstractionists.

Even the process of collaboration between Palomar and Valdezno defies convention, as the two jointly produce canvases using two separate processes for each artist.

Palomar utilizes actions of cutting, folding, and sculpting forms in the double performative aspects of her work, and produces the general three-dimensional character of the works in the cut-outs of blot-like forms and architectural silhouettes.

Valdizno, meanwhile, wields the brush to define the two-dimensional aspects of the works: through his creation of forms using industrial-based (e.g., ac enamel) paints.

Valdano is a Painting graduate of the University of the Philippines College of Fine Arts and a 1994 Juror's Choice awardee at the Philip Morris Art Awards.

A PRODUCT of defying the convention of artistic collaboration

Palomar also majored in Painting at the UPCA and took up further studies in painting and multi-media arts at the Paris American Academy and the Ecole Nationale Supérieure des Beaux-arts in Paris, France.

A visual arts grab bag

Gino Dormiendo

THE AAP Annual, courtesy of the Art Association of the Philippines, now on its 57th year, has had its share of troubles from both its benefactors and participants.

Some observers think the AAP has diffused itself by catering to too many categories—printmaking, for instance, which can very well be taken up by the Printmakers Association of the Philippines, or digital art, which could have been handled by a sponsoring group like Kodak.

This year's AAP Annual, as expected, witnessed a generally lopsided contest in many categories, such as printmaking (with a handful of entries) or digital art (even much less).

On the other hand, the Painting Category elicited the biggest number of participants, 128 in all, compared to mixed media, with 46.

Sculpture, often underrepresented, had even fewer entries this year with 25, and that is only insofar as quantity is concerned.

Motley mix

In the painting category, the figurative lorded it over the abstract, and in a motley mix of media. Some of these works had overwrought images that fell prey to literal-mindedness.

Joel Bartolome's first-prize winning "Idolottery" takes a jab at the Church hierarchy led by the Pope, who is shown wearing a mask while extending his hands to greet a bunch of well-wishers.

On closer view, the group includes clowns and buffoons, while around the Pontiff is a coterie of officials, and on their palms pyramid-shaped objects, talismans of the religious groups that parlay instant relief to temporal problems.

Rogelio "Toti" Cerda's runner-up in aquarelle, "Burnt-out," tackles a subject overly familiar to most artists: creative block. It shows the long-maned artist in front of an empty canvas, his forehead furrowed, while the deadline, scrawled on the note hanging by the easel, ticks ominously close. Strewn around him are crumpled sheets of paper, the light captured at its most menacing chiaroscuro.

Emmanuel Baiboa's "Biyayang Binalat sa Himalang Daigdig" is a most powerful evocation of the country's despicable condition, now going to the dogs, nay, cats, made to look like gladiators aiming for the kill.

The runner-up "Siete Palabras," by Edwin Moreno delineates the story of Christ's Passion, with His tortured image on the canvas which is made to resemble a plank, the nails symbolically sealing His fate.

Edilardo Paras' "Existence" resembles a Matrix-like configuration generated by technology, a visual delight though also a bit hackneyed in rendering.

Julio José Austria's "Inside

"HARI ng Kamaynilaan," by Janos Delacruz

"Guard" is an abstract rendering in dripping paint, geometric forms and graffiti—an uncompromising take on a world gone mad by terror.

Wanda Villanueva's "Frozen Identity" pushes the puzzling quest for identity with innovative treatment.

Less satisfying

Ostensibly less satisfying are the mixed-media entries, reflected in the limited number of truly deserving works that made it to the final list. The selection was

"JOURNEY to a Crowded Room," by Armando Toleza

The 57th AAP is a hodgepodge of the interesting and the commonplace Room," which incorporates a number of techniques and media such as printmaking, driftwood and corrugated panels surrounding and in the image.

The third-prize winner, Raul Piedra's "Where Ends Meet," has two major points that converge in the middle part. The boundaries spill over, as suggested by a wire (or rope) hanging in a curvilinear position.

Dan Raralio's "History Repeats Itself" is a stark gray-and-black configuration of a dire warning articulated by signs and symbols and graphics, a homespun message on humankind's transgressions.

Salvador Ching's "Patibong" is an assemblage of recycled pili nuts and gujo fibers in a neat grid-like configuration.

Eugene del Rosario's "Phantasmagoric Dream in a Mind of Someone Awake" has a diptych-like arrangement of two seemingly disparate images: one wall devoted to classical décor and another to an ultra-modern abstract composition.

Weakest link

The Sculpture Category, indeed, the annual's weakest link, has very little going for it, both in the number and quality of entries.

Rodel Rulera's "Free Wheel" (first prize) is a wooden contraption featuring the circular gadgets in varied sizes wound around the entire figure. With its natural organic look, the piece hardly pays homage to materiality, and neither does it transcend its nativist sentiments.

Allan Habio's "Forgotten Fishy Stories" (second place) is an installation of recycled metal parts salvaged from a boat.

Jonahmar Salvo's "Lumang Karunungan" (third prize) is made of basically one archetypal square iron fitting piled up like a totem pole that's perpetually balancing itself (although, of course, it has been reinforced by perhaps hardflex).

Mark Salvatus' "Pilgrims" also highlighted by a discussion on whether to give recognition to an entry that has been similarly executed in other contests, including last year's AAP Annual.

The work in question was Wilson Bearamino's "Bamboo Tattoos," an installation of cut bamboo poles arranged on canvas, with a window in the middle of the piece. As in Bearamino's past work, this piece has stickers plastered on its poles, a technique which a juror had initially thought was handpainted.

All four judges were, however, unfamiliar with the artist's track record. So, despite a juror's cautionary invocation, they handed him the top prize, anyway.

Second prize went to Armando Toleza's "Journey to a Crowded

Art outside the establishment

By Constantino C. Tejero

SHE'S still in diapers, yet she's creating paintings that have already been compared to the works of Miró, Pollock and Picasso. She can't even write her name yet, but she's selling artworks for an average of P3,000 per piece, and has so far grossed P70,000.

Amazing! some may exclaim—but not too amazing when one considers that 3-year-old Zoerya Emi Baldemor Abuel has for grandfathers the three Baldemor artists: her mother Irene's father, the sculptor Fred Baldemor, and his cousins, painter Manuel and sculptor Angelito Baldemor.

And that's not mentioning that the child's mother, grandmother and two uncles also paint. She is, in fact, a descendant of that artistic clan from Paete.

Artistic talent may not be genetic, but the penchant for art, even the skill, the temper and the taste for it can certainly be acquired if you're surrounded by such people.

Though she can count a few digits, recite the alphabet and sing nursery rhymes, Emi can't even sign her artworks yet. So her grandfather, whom she calls Dada Fred, had a rubber stamp of her name made in Japan when he visited recently.

On Dec. 22, her third birthday, the tot opens her first solo exhibit, "Bi no bi" (Japanese for "beauty of beauty"), in Gallery 828 at the Art Plaza, L/4, Shangri-La Plaza, Edsa, Mandaluyong City.

Some 150 pieces in oil and acrylic on canvas and watercolor on paper will be on display until Dec. 28. Half of the proceeds will go to a charity for the Department of Social Welfare and Development.

Rendered mostly on 8" x 10" canvases in broad strokes, squiggles, drops and drips in bold color and often with impasto, the pieces, with titles such as "Spider," "Clouds," "Red Snow," "Mountain," "Monster," are spontaneous abstraction with a few hunting at figures that only a child can visualize.

Gifted child

As Fred Baldemor tells it, his granddaughter's artistic preoccupation started on her second birthday, when she was gifted with a watercolor set and an artist's gown. Since then, almost every day, morning and afternoon, she'd be urging him, "Dada, let's go painting!" and led him down to his studio.

"Hindi mo mapipigilan 'yan, maski ano'ng idadahlilan mo," laughs Baldemor. "Habang nagpipinta ako, kinukuha mga gamit ko, kaya pinababayaan ko na."

He'd put a small canvas on the easel and, while singing nursery rhymes and Elvis Presley and wiggling her behind, the tot would finish one canvas after another. She averages three artworks a day.

"Gusto n'ya malalaking brush, kaya makita mo bold strokes," Baldemor continues. "Dinadampot lang nang dinadampot ang paint tubes, pinipindot direct sa canvas. One time she couldn't stop from squeezing, so I had to replace the paint into the tube."

He had to buy her the kind of acrylic that's directly squeezed from the tube and worked on the

Pila: A book and a plaza

ONE of the loveliest town squares I have ever seen is that of Pila in Laguna.

Unfortunately, when you mention the town's name, most people are at a loss to locate the place. Some vaguely think of long lines or even of athletic supplies (OK, so that's spelled with an F).

I can assure you that the trip to Laguna is worth it. Pila is a beautiful town.

Standing in the middle of the plaza, one sees houses from the early American era and even Spanish period clustered around a grassy mall. Going there early in the morning, when it is still all rosy and dewy, one truly feels transported to another era.

On one end of the plaza is the municipal hall (built before World War II) with its Neo-Classical architecture. At the other end is the huge brown mass of the church, which, together with the old school house, is a precious example of Spanish colonial heritage.

The latter building now holds Pila Museum. Exhibits include pottery found in Pila during archaeological excavations led by the Locsin couple, National Artist for Architecture Leandro and his wife Cecile.

This same building was the venue for displays on the town's traditional resources created by the local youth as a result of a workshop on heritage organized by the Met Museum.

Of course, one of the joys of visiting this town is the chance of being invited inside one of the stately houses. In one particular home, I remember seeing gracious pink interiors and a colored glass window that even featured a mpa hat.

In the quieter section of the plaza is a modest and yet pretty dwelling. This is the home of the Relova family. One of the daughters of the house is my friend, Cora Relova.

I have written about her and how she treated us to the most delicious lunch which included dulang, pako salad, bibingka hipon. Ah! I can never forget that gastronomic delight!

Lovely compound

But part of the pleasure of the meal was the setting of Cora's lovely compound just outside of Pila. Our hostess entertained us in an open-sided pavilion set off from its surroundings only by screens.

Cora works with famous designer Budji Layug, so something of his unique style is evident in the house. Along with very contemporary Budji-style pieces, one sees touches of the past. I loved the way bunches of dried pandan or anahaw were hung from the eaves to form a kind of curtain.

Cora is known to many people as Pila's heritage advocate. Together with Monina Rivera of the Pila Historical Society, she has been mobilizing her neighbors to protect the vestiges of their town's proud past. Cora had lived for many years abroad and, having come home just a few years ago, she found herself drawn to heritage advocacy.

When she first arrived, the town plaza was not as beautiful as it is today. It was messy and burdened with concrete structures. Cora managed to convince everyone to remove what was superfluous. Working quietly but with determination, she and her friends were able to get the National Historical Institute to declare the area around the town's center as a historical zone.

She has not looked back since. Almost every year she has had to fight threats to undermine the integrity of the plaza. She is truly a valiant woman deserving of our praise.

During our lunch with Cora, I recall her bringing out a big yellow book. This turned out to be a reissued edition of an old Spanish-Tagalog dictionary compiled by a priest, Fr. Pedro San Buenaventura. The original book was printed way back in 1613.

Apparently, as scholars like Ricky José have explained to me, there were never really enough Spanish people to teach the native Filipinos the language of the colonial masters. So it was agreed that it would be better for the priests to learn the local tongues instead, hence the need for the dictionaries.

They also relied on the help of young children who grew up naturally speaking Spanish and a Philippine language.

What I found remarkable was that the book was actually produced in the town of Pila itself. In fact, it is one of the first works in the Philippines printed with movable type.

The text on the cover even refers to the town as "...La noble villa de Pila." It is this impressive phrase that has always inspired Cora. She loves to recite the words as we walk around the town. It is an ancient title that gives substance to her labors.

Looking for the book

Little did I know that I would soon be enmeshed in this same dictionary. A few months later, while in Madrid, I casually asked a good friend, who was back in the Philippines, if he wanted anything from the general neighborhood of the Iberian peninsula.

The answer was one that I would soon live to regret: He wanted a copy of the reissue of the San Buenaventura dictionary. Though I was taken somewhat aback, I told myself, what could be so difficult about finding an old book? Yes, my innocence was actually quite charming.

The first place I checked was our local parish church. Of course, they thought I was some kind of a nut case. I would later learn to my embarrassment that San Buenaventura was Franciscan while our parish was run by Augustinians.

So I then went to the biggest bookstore in Madrid. Again my sanity was questioned. What year did you say? 1613? Couldn't I interest you in something a bit more current?

So that was it. I turned to an expert in lost causes, my aunt Ferre Basagoiti. If there was anyone who could find this book, she could. She began by calling—of course—the Franciscan mother house in Madrid. Now, why didn't I think of that?

Unfortunately, the woman she got hold of probably just had an unproductive manicure. She wasn't in a helpful mood. She airily dismissed my aunt by telling her to call Villa de Aranzazu in Guipuzcoa in Northern Spain.

I would have given up at that point simply because the names I was going to be working with had far too many letter Zs! But not my aunt.

A wonderful man by the name of Padre Arregui in Villa Aranzazu said he could only help by giving the number of a lady named Miriam, who lived in San Sebastian. I do not understand this part of the story. Perhaps Miriam was one of the founders of www.amazon.com.

At any rate she told my aunt (I had already fled by that time and my aunt was on her own!) that what she was looking for was the Archivo de los Indias, which had just been transferred to Calle Narciso Serra 21 back in—yes—Madrid!

When my aunt finally made it to the Archivo, she was met by Father Pedro who, it turns out, had just come back from doing research in—can you believe it—San Antonio in Makati! He then brought out a copy of my dictionary—at long last!

So was it worth it? In the introductory essay of the new edition, there is mention of how the scholar William Henry Scott explains the value of the many wonderful words in the dictionary. He explains that we can pick up from the various terms the complexity of technologies already in use by the ancient Filipinos even before they were exposed to Spanish culture.

Scott discusses the expertise of our ancestors in such fields as agriculture, metalwork, weaving, architecture and the like as evidenced by their wide vocabulary.

Somehow it is so comforting, when you open the pages, to see familiar words like bakal, bahay and even baboy. It is nice to know that 400 years ago, our grandparents spoke the same language.

Thinking back on Pila and its plaza and the issues that Cora and her friends must constantly address, one begins to understand that heritage is many things. It involves buildings, and artworks, weaving, food, books and plazas.

But it is also the work we do, the words we use, the feelings we express and yes, the ideas that we cherish.

Aging on the lap of history

The historic town of Majayjay, Laguna, celebrates its 433rd anniversary

By Pablo A. Trozado
Contributor

AN old adage that says "Looking back at the past paves the way to a bright future" goes for the people of Majayjay, Laguna, who never fail to remember their history.

Recently delegations from the town's 40 barangays, public-school teachers, students, senior citizens and civic groups gathered at the town plaza and formed a parade about 2-km long in celebration of the town's 433rd founding anniversary.

The colorful parade showcased the costumes of varying designs worn by the participants, including wrought pandan leaves fashioned into beautiful ensembles.

After the two-hour parade, the town plaza hosted a program of speeches, folk dances and singing, and general merriment. Clusters of lanzones were distributed free, courtesy of town people who owned orchards of the fruit.

Rep. Benjie Agarao of the 4th District of Laguna, the only invited guest, graced the occasion and commended the town and its mayor, Tino Rodillas.

After the program, the crowd, led by Vice Mayor Filo Guerra, moved to 40 shacks built around the barungay circle where food was served. Lambanog, the town's signature wine product, overflowed as roasted pigs and fried native chickens were consumed by the revelers.

WOMENSFOLK in gowns of pandan mats

The town of Majayjay, inhabited by such a convivial but prayerful people, is a historic place. Before it was a town, it was a thickly forested part of the Mt. Banahaw jungle.

With the advent of Spanish rule, Spanish missionaries were sent to Majayjay to convert the natives into Christians. The town was formally founded in 1571, with Don Gaspar Osorio as the first gobernadorcillo.

The name Majayjay was originally spelled in Tagalog as Mahnyhay, roughly translated as "full of sighs." It was a reference to the steep uphill trails that made trekking to the town difficult for visitors.

Spanish-era monuments still stand in the town. One of them is the 273-year-old St. Gregory Parish Church, completed only after 19 years of forced labor. Today, the church remains the social and spiritual center of the town of Majayjay.

Bahay Nakpil

This was the home of prominent historical figure Dr. Aristen Bautista and his in-laws, the Nakpil family. Bautista was a philanthropist and prominent figure deeply involved in the Philippine Revolution, a close colleague of Jose Rizal and Juan Luna.

Sharing the house with Bautista was Katipunan official Juan Nakpil, who married Gregoria de Jesus, widow of national hero Andres Bonifacio.

The celebrated painting "Parisian Life" by Juan Luna, now the centerpiece of the GSIS Museum, originally hung in the Bautista-Nakpil house.

The Nakpil house on Calle Barbosa (now Dr. Aristen Bautista Street) in Quapo is an outstanding example of Philippine architecture. It was designed by architect Juan Arellano in the classic bahay na bato style. The detailing done in turn-of-the-century Viennese Secession style makes the house one of a kind in the Philippines. All carvings, woodwork and grillwork are executed in the same abstracted, geometric lines depicting floral patterns.

Bahay Nakpil is now a museum open to the public. For information, call 7349341

San Agustin Museum

Probably the best collection of Spanish-colonial religious artifacts open to the public in Manila, the San Agustin Museum in the cloisters of San Agustin Church is an unforgettable experience.

San Agustin is the best place in the country to see the most exquisite santos (wooden images), religious paintings on wood and canvas, altars, silver, ceremonial vestments, old parchment missals and hymnals.

Inscribed on the Unesco World Heritage List, San Agustin Church is the oldest stone church in the country and definitely worth a visit.

A Christmas exhibit of 300 Philippine and foreign belens (Nativity crèches) is now on exhibit at the second-floor cloister.

Museo Pambata

Can you actually have fun in a museum? If you have to ask that question, then you probably haven't been to museums lately.

Bring the children to Museo Pambata on the corner of Roxas Boulevard and T.M. Kalaw. Also take them to Museum of the Filipino People on Agrifina Circle at the Taft Avenue end of Rizal Park.

Museo Pambata is the ultimate children's trip. It is a "Touch me!" museum with interactive exhibits setting a fun atmosphere where children (and adults) learn basic scientific facts and the rudiments of electricity, among other things. It is where simulated jungles complete with mini waterfalls teach proper care of the environment.

Heritage is not forgotten at Museo Pambata. Scale models of Spanish-era houses in the Manila district of Binondo are living exhibits, child-size playhouses where children can enter to play with tactile exhibits which teach how their great grandparents lived.

Hearing children squeal with delight as they experience Museo Pambata is reward enough for having taken the trek to take them there. For information, call 5231797

Museum of the Filipino People

The Museum of the Filipino People is a fun place. If you think museums are Jurassic places whose stuffy exhibits are covered with dust, this is the museum to change your mind. Its interactive exhibits light up at the touch of a button and set off a chain of sound effects. Sections in maps illuminate to show where the different people of the Philippines live. Engaging videos and amazing exhibits trace the evolution of Filipinos and their land.

The "Alay ng Dagat—The San Diego 1600 Time Capsule" traces the saga of the San Diego, a Cebu-constructed galleon that sank off the coast of Nasugbu, Batangas, as it was sailing off to battle against the Dutch. On exhibit are samples of its cargo—weaponry, ceramics, jars and even delicate rosaries—retrieved through an extensive underwater archaeology project.

It is difficult to leave the Museum of the Filipino People without rediscovering pride for Filipino culture, an elusive feeling for the Filipino these days. Call 5243005.

Manila is not a city that stands to win urban beauty contests or rank high in the yearly lists of the world's most livable cities. However, she does have a few surprises up her sleeve.

cludes to the nature of reality and illusion, with its Pandora's box-like installation partly opened to reveal its contents.

Mevin John Anre's "Re-awakening" is a recycled contraption from fibrous materials, with a partly exposed center, not unlike a flower about to burst open. Benjie Bisaya's "Tugaw" is nothing but a three-legged bench assembled from discarded tree trunks.

Varied media

Truly, the recycling spirit has taken the better of our craftsmen and artists, as the surfeit of rehashed and reassembled pieces has become more pronounced this year, and more glaring among local sculptors.

The Drawing Category, with 25-odd entries in equally varied media, failed to excite its spirited share of interest from the judges.

"BURNT-OUT," by Rogelio "Toti" Cerdá

Raul Agner's "Material Fool" easily outclasses the rest with its richly conured and equally fervid image of what seems to be a heart-rending, mind-blowing tableau of Pinoy diaspora.

Carlito Casamayor's "Inspirasyon" is a tad too pretty in its depiction of an otherwise surreal subject. John Espino's "Quintessence" manages to be fairly engrossing, but the subject is a tired and tried one.

As to printmaking, which managed to attract just six entries, it was clear from the onset that Janos Delacruz's "Hari ng Kamaynisan" was fated to be the winner.

Napoleon Banay's "Pista sa Nasyon" and Demosthenes Campos' "Fastidious Race" manage to look fresh and charming in their interpretation of the Pinoy's penchant for fun and feasting.

Equally handicapped by a lack of entries are the categories of digital art and photography. But making up for the glaring lack is Jonathan Lambino's "Untitled," adjudged best entry in the former, with its phantasmagoric view of a game of chess with man and fish that alludes to the game of destruction on the planet.

Surreal is Joey Ong's "Dusk," where the view is more hedonistic and less semiotic in character than Lambino's. Marlon Despuet's "Transfigure" captures the movement of a group of dancers in a parade, through a lens hazy and far from dramatic.

Execrable

Finally, photography, again the annual's most execrable category as evident in the low level of competitiveness and output.

Francis Carlos Orara's "In Disguise" (best entry), James Zabala's "Yosi," Lyndon Joseph Susi's "Apapa Um Mamaw" and Genalyn Paner's "Milky Bath" are unquestionably the works of photographers with little daring. They are bereft of drama and realism—those qualities that make photography a stimulating medium for envisioning the world.

HOROSCOPE

BY FRANCIS DRAKE

YOU BORN TODAY: You have a curious, exploring mind. You're bright, quick and impulsive. Your ideas generate lots of activity. You have to dive into new areas of study and exploration. You study the mind with your head in the clouds and your feet planted firmly on the ground. An important choice awaits you this year. Choose wisely.

Birthday of: John Spencer, actor; Billy Bragg, musician; Jenny Agutter, actress.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Remember to be patient with others. It's easy for you to fly off the handle. But anger serves no purpose except to make everyone miserable.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20): Because you fit from activity to activity, from person to person, it's not easy to be contented. It's true there is no end to "better," but that's the way life works.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22): Your pride can often prevent you from doing what you want to do. It could also make you do things you don't want to do. Doesn't sound too helpful, does it?

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Be careful about getting stuck in your velvet rut. This can happen because you like a predictable outcome. (You're not keen on surprises.) But life is full of surprises!

CANCER (June 21 to July 22): You stay in the wrong relationships too long. That's because you have a hard time letting go of anything (even junk!) Sometimes you have to let go.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): In your quest for perfection, the operative word constantly in your mind is "imperfect." You tend to look at something and think, "What's wrong with this picture?" Relax.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You know you can't please everyone all the time—why bother trying? If you please yourself most of the time, you'll please the majority of those around you. Try it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You tend to see things in black-and-white terms. You immediately like someone or not. But life is actually shades of gray. (Do you think you might be a bit too extreme?)

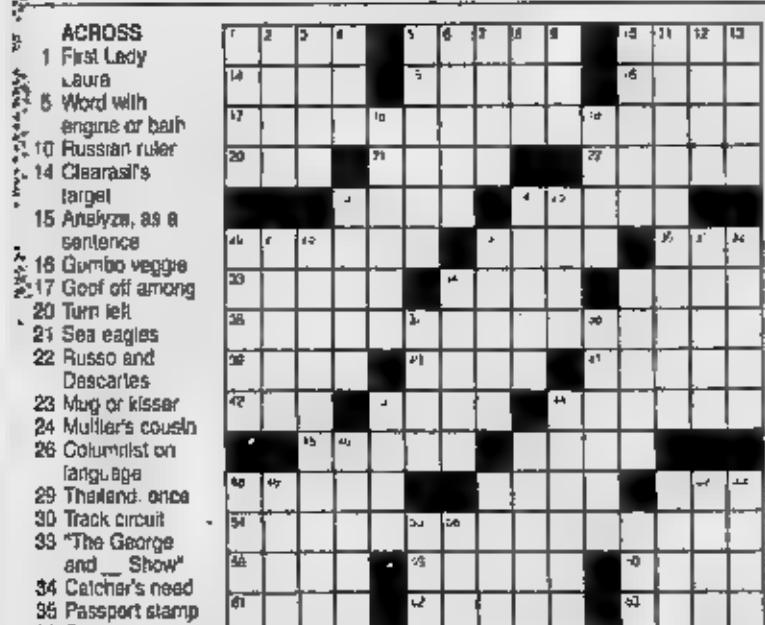

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Optimism is a wonderful thing, but realism is valuable too. It's important to remember not to promise more than you can deliver.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19): Fear of rejection and fear of failure often hold you back. In this way, you are your greatest enemy. Try to be bolder about going after what you want.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18): It's curious: Taurus has the reputation for being stubborn, but you are the most stubborn sign of all. You just hide it cleverly. (Plus, you're very bright.)

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20): Don't fall into the trap of feeling victimized about life. It's easy for you to think you "always" get something or you "never" get something.

Equestrian elite grace the first Globe Platinum Cup

Manila's elite circle gathered at the Alabang Country Club recently for a weekend of family fun and equestrian excellence as the country's top bets and promising young riders vied for the first ever Globe Platinum Cup. A prestigious event highlighting the country's show-jumping calendar, the Globe Platinum Cup is the only local competition that is of international standards. Designed by an international course designer, the courses used international standard equipment as designated by Federation Equestre International rules. Organized by Los Tamaros Equestrian and Polo Center, the event was also a fundraiser for the Saint Rita Orphanage, an organization fostering care for less fortunate children.

Excitement was at fever pitch as the riders — consisting of scions of the country's privileged and powerful — took their places in each of the show-jumping categories. Neophyte riders got a taste of competition as they vied for the Los Tamaros 0.85 Meter Speed Class and 1.0 Meter Speed Class, while more experienced show-jumpers battled it out for the 1.10 and 1.20 Meter Speed Classes sponsored by Metro Magazine. World-class equestrienne and Globe Platinum endorser Toni Leviste romped off with the 1.2 Meter Speed Class trophy, while Mateo and Diego Lorenzo, sons of fellow Platinum endorser Martin Lorenzo, were victorious in the 1.0 and 1.1 Meter Speed Classes, respectively.

Globe Platinum presented four of the highly anticipated showjumping events. Natalie Zaru onboard Geronimo took first place at the 0.9 Meter Class, while Diego Lorenzo and Intrigue swept the 1.05 and 1.15 Meter Class divisions. But the most thrilling contest by far was the Globe Platinum 1.25 Meter Class. Fiercely fought out by the country's top ranked riders, the competition ended in a four-way tie between veterans Leviste on Globe Platinum Leap of Faith, Mikee Cojuangco Jaworski on Rustic Rouge and Luisita, Janine Oppen Santos on Dnft, and promising young rider Joker Arroyo.

Spectators were treated to exclusive activities all throughout the two-day affair. Globe Platinum subscribers and their families were treated to complimentary pony rides and free access to the kiddie fun fair, which featured giant trampolines and the one-of-a-kind Titanic slide. Parents were delighted to see their little boys and girls saashay down the ramp donning the latest outfits from Big & Small Co., Spin, and Orange Juice during a mini fashion show after the competition.

The elite equestrian scene matches the sophistication and cultivated sensibilities of Globe Platinum subscribers. Existing Globe subscribers with a minimum monthly usage of P4,000 (excluding taxes and adjustments) for the last twelve months and with good credit standing are qualified for Globe Platinum membership, as are new subscribers of a G-Plan or fully consumable G-Flex Plan at P5,000, P7,000, or P10,000. Between You and I: A Little Book of Bad English, by James Cochran. Includes George Orwell's famous essay "Politics and the English Language." This book is a nice surprise because much of what we usually think is "bad" English is, it turns out, perfectly good. And vice-versa, as in phrases like the title, which sounds more learned than the common "you and me" but is, in fact, incorrect.

1,000 Places to See Before You Die: A Traveler's Life List, by Patricia Schultz. This NY Times No. 1 bestseller is a compilation of destinations on-and-off the beaten track from Europe, Africa and the Middle East to Asia, Australia, New Zealand and the Pacific Islands to the US, Canada, Latin America, The Caribbean, Bahamas and Bermuda. Quite expectedly, the Banat Rice Terraces, Taal Volcano and Amapulo merited mentions.

When Presidents Lie, A History of Official Deception and Its Consequences, by journalist and historian Eric Alterman. Examines four important presidential lies relating to matters of war and peace. The Yalta Conference, the Cuban Missile Crisis, the Gulf of Tonkin Incident, and the Central America wars of the 1980s represent unhappy turning points in American history and the misrepresentations made about them to the American public.

They remember him

By Linda B. Bolido

IN LIFE, Blas F. Ople had been a journalist, a politician, public servant. He rose from humble origins in Hagonoy, Bulacan to become a Cabinet member, a senator, the first Filipino president of the International Labor Conference and many other things in between.

Everything he had been in the past converge in the book "As We Remember Him," a collection of reminiscences by people he got to know in his various pursuits. The book was launched on Dec. 14 to mark the first death anniversary of Ople, who died on a plane while en route from Japan to Bahrain for a conference. The longest-serving labor secretary was then back in the Cabinet having given up his seat in the Senate to accept President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's offer to become her foreign affairs secretary.

Family, headed by his widow Susana Ople, friends and former colleagues gathered at Ople's tomb at the Libingan ng mga Bayani in Makati City for a morning Mass and the launching of the book, a project initiated by daughter Susan Ople, currently labor undersecretary.

Edited by journalists Fred de la Rosa and Alfredo G. Rosario, who both served in the Ople-headed Department of Labor and Employment; and with a cover designed by old friend Mauro Malang Santos, "As We Remember Him," is a virtual gallery of who's who in media, government and politics.

The venerable Carmen "Chitang" Guerrero Nakpil talks about "My Rich Uncle," her former colleague in the old Roces-owned Manila Times group. But the gifts she received so generously from him "were mostly books... inscribed in his own fine handwriting, flowing with felicitous phrases."

Palanca award-winning short story writer Romy V. Diaz, board chair of the new Manila Times and who became the first director general of the National Manpower and Youth Council (now Technology and Skills Development Authority or TESDA), recalls that on his first meeting with the young Ople, the Bulakeño was soliciting signatures for a petition on behalf of tenant farmers of his province. "It (the petition) was an eloquent plea on behalf of all landless farmers not only in Bulacan, but all over Central Luzon," Diaz said. At the time, both he and Ople were on their way to Baguio for a conference of the College Editors Guild.

Former Supreme Court Justice Cecilia Muñoz Palma, who was president of the 1986 Constitutional Commission, recalls how, when she was being personally maligned in media, to the extent of being called tanga, "No one came to my defense except my former (Constitutional) Commissioner Blas Ople, (then) Senate president pro tempore." In a public statement, Muñoz-Palma says Ople, in tones that must have resonated in all corners, urged the person attacking her "to publicly apologize... for his derogatory remark... I don't know of any Filipino woman more deserving of respect than (her). To demean her is almost like profaning an altar."

Italian Ambassador Umberto Colesanti, who was president of the European Union in Manila when Ople was foreign affairs secretary, remembers, "To his efficiency, (he) added a great culture and a deep interest in European and Italian affairs in particular, ranging from the conservation of works of art to the casting of ballots by Italians abroad."

SUSANA V. Ople, widow of Blas F. Ople, thanks the board of the Philippine Postal Corporation for issuing a commemorative stamp honoring the late foreign affairs secretary.

'Woman of Tammuz' and new edition of Sorsogon studies journal launched

"WOMEN of Tammuz" completes A. G. Urraza's tetralogy of novels, "Chronicles of the Changing Seasons," which is a creative rendition of the events of the last hundred years of the Philippine struggle to be free, to be truly independent, and to live in the dignity and self-respect.

The novel, along with the newest edition of "Sarabihon, A Journal of Sorsogon Studies," was launched recently.

"Women of Tammuz" is part of that broad fictional panorama recreated in Urraza's four novels through the eyes and heart of two families, showing with bold colorful strokes the most significant and perhaps the most tragic moments of our history.

Chronologically, "Women of Tammuz" is the second book of the saga, and with this novel, the four significant periods of our recent history are finally completely etched in their clearest details: the Philippine Revolution and the Philippine-American War in "A Passing Season"; the horrors of war and the Japanese Occupation in "Women of Tammuz"; the evils and cruelty of a dictatorship in "Bamboo in the Wind"; and in "Feast of the Innocents"—the time of freedom and democracy—what we did with this great opportunity to make ourselves a people proud of its integrity and freedom.

The novel is available at Bookmark, The Filipino Bookstore, National Bookstore and Books for Less.

"Sarabihon" is published by the Sorsogon Heritage Society Inc. Call 3730814.

Hilary Swank's comeback worthy of Muhammad Ali

LOS ANGELES—Hilary Swank showed signs of becoming one of those actresses who wins an Academy Award then fades into a succession of forgettable roles. But with Clint Eastwood's splendid "Million Dollar Baby," she makes a comeback worthy of Muhammad Ali, playing a woman hoping to rise above her hard-knock life by training as a boxer.

Barely a year after the release of "Mystic River," Eastwood delivers a second consecutive drama that fearlessly probes the shadows of human morality without falling back on easy answers.

Along with Swank, who won a best-actress Oscar for "Boys Don't Cry," Eastwood is receiving serious awards consideration as both lead actor and director. The film itself should follow "Mystic River" as a best-picture contender, and co-star Morgan Freeman belongs among the front-runners for supporting actor.

Crackling dialogue

Adapted from short stories by former boxing "cut man" RX Toole, the screenplay by Paul Haggis crackles with tough-guy dialogue and insightful street wisdom.

Eastwood plays lovably frangible gym owner and boxing trainer Frankie Dunn, a guilt-ridden man with an estranged daughter and a host of personal sins for which he cannot find atonement, despite attending Mass each morning.

Frankie's gym attracts hard-luck cases, including ex-fighter Eddie "Scrap-Iron" Dupris

'Million Dollar Baby' should be a strong best-picture contender

(Freeman)—Scrap for short—who makes an ascetic home in the gym back room and fills a variety of roles from cleaning toilets to mentoring up-and-coming athletes.

After a fighter Frankie has groomed for a title shot jumps ship to another manager, a new contender enters his life, Maggie Fitzgerald (Swank). A waitress with a harsh upbringing behind her and nothing but a lifetime of bad tips ahead, Maggie turns to boxing, the only thing she ever felt good doing.

Frankie initially scoffs her desire to fight, saying the 30-something Maggie is too old to train and that competitive boxing among women is a fad, the "latest freak show out there."

Exuberant half

Scrap takes pity on Maggie and tosses her some nuggets of advice. And gradually, Frankie is sucked in, too, first by exuberation over Maggie's coarse boxing form, later by her indomitable high spirits and tenacity, which come packaged with a natural ability to punch opponents' lights out.

Maggie's transition from clumsy combatant to potential champion is abrupt but easy enough to accept given the exuberance of the film's second act, when she and Frankie fall into a delightful surrogate father-daughter relationship and she becomes the darling of fight crowds.

Just when it seems the film will wrap up as a satisfying "Rocky"-like chick flick, "Million Dollar Baby" turns deep and dark, presenting a harsh ethical dilemma that coaxes potentially raw performances from Eastwood and Swank.

Eastwood and Freeman fall back into the same easy camaraderie they demonstrated in the director's dark Western, "Unforgiven." Freeman's voice-overs, delivered with austere detachment, serve as an emotional anchor and nicely complement the action.

Forlorn score

The score by Eastwood, with orchestration by his longtime collaborator Lennie Niehaus, provides a suitably forlorn musical backdrop reminiscent of the sparse tones of "Unforgiven."

The closing image—in its equivocal tone, at least—also harks back to the uncertain ending of that great Western.

For the decade or so between "Unforgiven" and "Mystic River," Eastwood mostly made commonplace movies. At 74, Eastwood has hit a late-career stride. With nothing to prove to anyone, he's willing to tackle ambivalent characters and bleak moral questions rarely seen in Hollywood films.

"Million Dollar Baby," a Warner Bros. release, runs 132 minutes.

SWANK teams up with fellow Oscar winner Clint Eastwood in this serious movie.

For Bobby Darin devotees only

NEW YORK—Quick show of hands: Who wants to see Kevin Spacey singing and dancing for two hours as Bobby Darin?

Come on, people, he looks and sounds just like him!

Well, Kevin Spacey wanted to see Kevin Spacey as Bobby Darin. That seems to be the entire point of "Beyond the Sea," in which he plays the crooner from his rise to music and movie popularity in the '60s, through his turn as a folk singer during the Vietnam War, and up to his death following open-heart surgery in 1973.

Spacey told The Associated Press earlier this year: "This wasn't about an actor's ego, wanting to get my rocks off by singing in a movie." But by functioning as director, co-writer and star, he's created a film that feels unshakably like a vanity project.

You have to admire Spacey for his enthusiasm, though, and for sharing the same unflappable sense of determination to get the film made as the character he's playing in the film itself.

Sounds like...

And he's at least trying to do something different with the biopic structure—though it's strangely similar to the similarly painful Cole Porter movie, "De-Lovely," which must have been a coincidence because they came out during the same year.

As in that earlier film, in which a dying Porter sits in a theater and watches his story unfold onstage with an Archangel Gabriel figure next to him, "Beyond the Sea" begins with Darin making a fictional movie about his life, with a child version of himself (William Ullrich) guiding him through the highlights.

peatedly drawing attention to itself and away from the key events in Darin's life we're supposed to care about. And Young Bobby shows up at really obvious emotional times (when Darin's mother dies, for example) as if we couldn't figure out for ourselves that these are the moments in which an adult feels like a scared, confused child.

Bobby's mother (Brenda Blethyn, doing a heavy Noo Yawk accent) was the one who pushed him into show business in the first place. Stricken with rheumatic fever as a child, he wasn't expected to live past 15, but his love of performing songs like "Mack the Knife" and the film's title tune somehow kept him alive until 37.

A little creepy

But Spacey, the "American Beauty" star, is 45 and looks it—a fact he acknowledges in the film early on by having Darin's brother-in-law (Bob Hoskins, wasted in a supporting role) bark, "It's a self-portrait on film! He was born to play the part and you damn well know it!"

His age becomes insurmountable, though, when Darin starts wooing 16-year-old Sandra Dee (the sunny Kate Bosworth) on the set of a movie they made together. In real life, Darin was eight years older than Dee. Also in real life, Spacey is 24 years older than Bosworth, which is more than a little creepy and makes their romantic scenes together nearly unbearable to watch, except for the train-wreck factor.

Clearly "Beyond the Sea" is for Darin devotees only, who will not only ignore this and other eviscerating reviews, but they'll probably already have seen Spacey on tour with a 19-piece big band, singing Darin's songs live. AP

Celebrity Christmas cards for Pinoys away from home

CELEBRITIES took time out to add to the Christmas cheer even as they revealed their artistic side. They created Christmas cards, which will be given to Filipino workers on board the Star Cruise ships who will be away from home on Christmas.

The cards and their designs were just as colorful and as varied as the people who made them.

Award-winning actor Christopher de Leon drew a beautiful pencil sketch of local banga or clay jars.

The card by Raphael Fernandez has the line "Home is Just Over the Horizon" written under a marking pen sketch of a sunset on the horizon.

Actor and model Luke Jickain has a cure for homesickness—a scene from Edsa/Kamuning on the cover of his card.

Christmas trees are popular with drop-dead gorgeous model Francis Ricalfort, brothers (and sons of photographer Patrick Uy) Timothy and Christopher Uy, StarStruck winner Ysmien Kurdi, and Gabriel de Leon.

Other symbols of Christmas are TV host Phoenela Barranda's wreath; Sandy Andolong's parol hanging in a nipa hut; model Bubbles Paraiso's snowman; Renz Fernandez's Santa, and Christmas ribbons by Evelyn Uy and Es-senses' Toni Abad.

Unusual are actor Ton-Ton Gutierrez's ship (inspired by Star Cruises), his actress wife Glydel Mercado's living-room scene, and talent manager Lolit Solis' flower.

Slogans are also popular. From the badminton trio; Luz Siguan-Reyna asks, "Have you been naughty or nice?" on her card; Rina Aguilar says, "Give love on Xmas Day!," and Carol Francisco wishes everyone "Peace, Love, Joy."

Celebrity husband-and-wife Rudy Fernandez and Lorna Tolentino have cards with the same message: "May Christmas bring you warmth and cheer, and leave its brightness all next year."

Color also rules. Model couple Raya Mananquil and Corey Wills both have colorful cards, his featuring a funny beach scene, and hers a happy dog in a Santa hat.

Former beauty queen Gem Padilla has pastel renditions of starry Christmas nights. Tali, dark and handsome model Zanjoe Marudo has multicolored patterns on his.

Endorsers of leading American watch brand Timex—actress Claudine Barreto, actor/singer Paolo Pascual and hunky Australian TV host Marc Nelson—also made cards of their own. These, too, will be sent to the Filipino crew on board Star Cruises ships.

Timex will help send and distribute the cards. Timex also celebrates its 150th year of precision watchmaking this year, and this is its way of reaching out during the holidays.

It's time to watch the year's most excellent films!

Catch the most awaited annual event in local film industry!

U2 in Rock and Roll Hall of Fame

LOS ANGELES—They may already be the world's biggest band, and Irish rockers U2 will add another accolade to their sheaf of honors by joining the legends in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame next year, organizers have announced.

The Pretenders, soul veterans Percy Sledge and the O'Jays, and blues guitarist Buddy Guy will also be inducted at the 20th annual ceremony, culminating with an all-star jam, in New York on March 14, the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame Foundation said.

Nominees, who must have a 25-year recording history, are chosen by a group of music industry insiders. Most worthy acts have already been inducted, although some observers have criticized the absence of such influential groups as the Sex Pistols, Black Sabbath and Lynyrd Skynyrd. U2 and the Pretenders both formed in the aftermath of the punk rock explosion of the late 1970s, while the O'Jays started out in 1958 and dominated the 1970s soul scene with such hits as "Love Train" and "I Love Music (Part 1)." Sledge scored his biggest hit, "When a Man Loves a Woman" in 1966, while Guy has kept the Chicago blues sound alive since the late 1960s.

The honor for U2 will come shortly after it begins a world tour in Florida on March 1, 2005. The band recently released its heavily promoted album, "How to Dismantle an Atomic Bomb," which topped the charts around the world and garnered three Grammy nominations last week.

U2, founded in 1978 in Dublin, quickly made a name for itself with strident, politically nuanced songs such as "Sunday Bloody Sunday."

The band hit its stride with its 1987 album, "The Joshua Tree," which won the Grammy for album of the year. Subsequent tours and albums have become big events, although lead singer Bono has still found time to lobby on behalf of various causes, including reducing third world debt.

U2's lineup, unchanged through the years, is rounded out by guitarist The Edge (born Dave Evans), drummer Larry Mullen Jr. and bass player Adam Clayton, all of whom continue to reside in Ireland. Reuters

SHOW TIME

Bodega City marks 25th year

"CHRISTMAS Love," a concert featuring singer, actress and broadcaster Juvy de Guzman, ushered in a week of holiday parties and shows to celebrate Bodega City's 25th anniversary.

Juvy de Guzman is the host of "Let's Talk on the Air," on dzXQ. Her guests last night were Paul Toledo, Bert Dominic, Fiona Samadon, Honey Blanca, The Psychopatics, Dyndel Caranto, and the Point Guys.

Tonight, loyal Bodega patrons will be treated to a re-staging of "Here Come the Three Reindeers," featuring Bobby, Joey, and Wally, former singer-mainstays of the club, which used to be known as Bodega Polkhouse.

Ballroom dance enthusiasts will have the place for a playroom tomorrow night, with "The Ding Malazad Band Merry Go-Round," a musical special.

On Thursday, the crowd goes native with "Pasko na po, Ninang. Pasko na po, Ninang." This is a Christmas carol show with big raffle prizes. At stake is a free weekend for two at the Hundred Islands Resort Hotel in Alaminos, Pangasinan.

NEW YORK—A guitar owned and played by the late Beatle George Harrison sold for $567,500 Friday at an auction of entertainment memorabilia which saw some other prize lots fail to make their reserve price.

Harrison's rare Gibson SG guitar appeared in two Beatles movies, was used by Harrison on the "Revolver" album, and played by John Lennon during the "White Album" recording sessions in 1969.

The price exceeded the high estimate of $500,000 set by Christie's auction house in New York, but was still far short of the guitar record set in June, when Eric Clapton's prized Stratocaster "Blackie" sold for $959,500.

Another highlight of the Christie's sale, a 1959 Gibson guitar used by Rolling Stone Keith Richards in the mid 1960s, was estimated to fetch $400,000 but failed to sell.

Another lot that did not manage to make its reserve price was Elvis Presley's US Army trenchcoat, valued at $15,000.

The auction comprised a total of 400 lots, including more than 70 items of Beatles memorabilia.

Childhood paraphernalia included a Britney Spears' book report from the 1980s which sold for $1,912, almost double its pre-sale estimate, and a Jimi Hendrix Junior High School Yearbook from 1961 that went for $597.

Away from the music world, $95,600 was the winning bid for the Best Picture Oscar awarded to the movie "How Green Was My Valley," which famously beat out "Citizen Kane" in 1941.

Reason to smile

By Armin Adina

WHILE the country was battling waves of tragedy from four successive typhoons, a Filipina was making waves in Sanya, China, in the world of beauty pageants.

Binibining Pilipinas-World Maria Karla Bautista capped her year of victory on Dec. 4 with a Top 5 finish in Miss World 2004. Being the highest ranked Asian in the pageant, she was also proclaimed Asia and Oceania's Queen of Beauty, the same award Ruffa Gutierrez received when the actress finished third in the same pageant in 1993.

Karla has given the country a three-year finalist placement in the widest and oldest international pageant in the world. Katherine Manalo was in the final 10 in 2002, while Mafae Yunon was in the Top 5 last year.

"I hope that amidst all the calamity, I have given Filipinos a reason to smile," Karla told the media upon her arrival last Monday.

Karla went to China last month, fully aware of the hard work ahead. But she also knew that her countrymen would not let her down. "I wouldn't have made it this far without your help," she told her kababayan. "Receiving flowers, calls, and text messages ... made me feel happy."

The winners

For the first time in the pageant's 54-year history, this year's winner was selected by public voting. Telephone, SMS and on-line votes from over 100 countries were tabulated to determine the winner. Peru's Maria Julia Manilla Garcia beat 106 other contestants for the title. She was also The Americas' Queen of Beauty.

Claudia Cruz of the Dominican Republic ranked second and was The Caribbean's Queen of Beauty. United States' Nancy Randall, winner of the "fast-track" Beach Beauty competition, placed third. Completing the Top 5 is Poland's Katarzyna Borowicz, Europe's Queen of Beauty.

For the voting, a point system was implemented by the pageant organizers. Instead of getting the total number votes for each delegate, points were allocated for each country's 10 highest vote-getters. The highest ranked delegate in a country received 10 points, while the second got 9 points, and so on.

The five delegates who won in the fast-track events received an additional 25 points and automatically landed in the Top 15. Aside from Nancy, the other fast-track winners were Wales' Amy Guy as Miss Sports and Fitness; Mexico's Jessica Ramirez, Top Fashion Model; Sherrin Jermy of Antigua, Miss Talent; and Australia's Sarah Davies, Contestants' Choice, voted by the delegates.

Completing the Top 15 were Jin Yang of the People's Republic of China, Jana Dolezevova of Czech Republic, Russia's Tatiana Sidorchuk, Trinidad and Tobago's Kenisha Thom, Nguyen Thi Huyen of Vietnam, and Nigeria's Anita Uwagbale, who was also proclaimed Africa's Queen of Beauty.

Eye on the crown

Asked who she thought would win, Karla replied: "I came to the contest with the hope that I would be the winner. I knew someone was going to win and I hoped it would be me." But she said she was happy with Peru's victory. "She's pretty and smart, she'd make a great Miss World."

When Karla placed fourth in the Beach Beauty competition, she felt that greater things were coming her way. This was the general feeling in her group, which included four more Asians. The delegates were divided in eight groups and Karla belonged to Group 3.

Karla confessed that the girls hoped she would represent the continent in the Top 15. And she also has kind words for her "neighbors." Thailand, her roommate, was "very nice." Korea was "cute and funny, like our youngest sister in the group." She grew fond of the two girls, as well as Miss Hong Kong.

She was not able to interact much with the girls from other groups but she did not mind that, she said, because she "immensely" enjoyed the company of her own. Group 3 even held a pajama party after her outstanding placement in the Beach Beauty contest. And when Karla was called in the Top 5, her group frantically cheered backstage, prompting their chaperones to ask them to pipe down.

"I HOPE to help abused women as a lawyer."

"My group was laid back, not competitive at all. We were just out to enjoy everything that happened," Karla said.

Talented, too

Karla also made an impression in the talent competition. Out of the more than 80 women who auditioned, she was among the 20 who were asked to perform during the talent ceremonies. Karla recited a poem that she had written herself.

International news caught pieces of Karla's mind in two press conferences. She was selected by pageant officials to speak in two engagements—the AIDS Day conference and the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation. The latter turned out to be an occasion to defend the pageant when international reporters asked why she and the other girls participated in a contest where they were made "to display their bodies."

"I was told of the speaking engagements only five minutes prior," Karla recounted, laughing.

After the pageant, Karla hopes to use her victory to help typhoon victims. "Maybe I could invite people to donate money and goods. I will use my title to live out Miss World's principle, 'beauty with a purpose.'"

Looking at law

And when her reign ends in February next year, Karla will resume her studies at the University of the Philippines in Diliman. She was a sophomore Mass Communications coed in UP Cebu when she joined the local pageant last March. Then she hopes to pursue a career in broadcasting "so I can save up for a good law school."

"I hope to help abused women as a lawyer," she said. "It disheartens me that in this modern age, women are still being maltreated, and they still think they deserve it." She also wishes to defend poor people who are "deprived of justice just because they can't afford good lawyers."

For now, Karla is bent on living the last months of her reign as a true beauty queen, one who puts a smile on her countrymen's face, just by being around.

Will Pamela get Chinese nod?

BEIJING—A semi-naked Pamela Anderson will beckon from Chinese billboards in a new anti-fur campaign—if the former "Baywatch" star can get past the censors.

The posters, featuring the slogan "Give fur the cold shoulder" in English, show the Canadian-born actress topless with her back to the camera and an arm partly hiding her right breast.

An image of falling snow appears above Chinese characters reading "Cold shoulders are nothing compared to the cold they feel," and "Please don't wear fur."

China's straight-laced media regulators have yet to give the posters a green light, said Jason Baker, a Hong Kong-based spokesman for People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, or PETA, which is promoting the anti-fur campaign.

"Depending on the censors, they may be concerned about it, but it's very tastefully done," Baker said.

"We may end up having to crop (the photo) a bit."

Too much sex

Chinese officials last week complained advertisers were using too much sexual innuendo and announced stricter screening rules for television ads.

According to PETA, China was the origin of 40 percent of all American fur imports in 2000.

"I'm perfectly happy to bare my skin if it will help save animals' skins," Anderson was quoted as saying in the statement.

PETA also plans to post the Anderson pictures in tropical Singapore, whose consumers it said are being increasingly targeted by the fur industry.

Anderson, now a columnist for Jane magazine, is best known for her role in "Baywatch" and was formerly married to Motley Crue drummer Tommy Lee. She has been a longtime PETA and animal rights supporter. AP Sharon Stone: Did she or didn't she?

LOS ANGELES—Actress Sharon Stone claims a Beverly Hills doctor slandered and libeled her by allegedly telling magazines that he performed cosmetic surgery on her famous face.

The lawsuit cites articles in US Weekly and In Touch magazines that raise the question of whether Stone had a face-lift and suggest it was done by plastic surgeon Dr. Renato Calabria.

The "Basic Instinct" actress maintains that such allegations damaged her reputation and hurt her ability to find work. She seeks unspecified damages in the lawsuit, filed Monday in Superior Court.

Neither of the articles cites Calabria as saying he performed the surgery.

Arturi Barrens, a lawyer for Calabria, called the lawsuit "not well thought out," and said, "Dr. Calabria has never told anyone that he has (performed) surgery on Sharon Stone."

Shame

Stone alleges that Calabria or his associates contacted the magazines and that such statements tended to expose her "to shame and ridicule, and discourage others in the film industry from association ... or dealing with (her)."

"Sharon Stone has a reputation for her natural beauty and glamour," according to the lawsuit. "While she certainly respects others' choice to do so, Sharon Stone has never undergone a face-lift in order to improve her physical appearance."

THE ACTRESS says she was "ridiculed."

The 46-year-old actress also accuses Calabria of putting the magazine articles on his Web site to "boast" of his purported professional relationship with her.

Barrens said Calabria put the articles on the Web site because they highlight a particular kind of face-lift he innovated.

"He has a right to choose any articles that reference his name and his practice," Barrens said. AP
